ELEMENTS OF THE BATTLE-FIELD.

Probable Capture of Richmond Without Another Battle.

The Rebels Thoroughly Disheartened.

HEADQUARTERS, Tuesday, June 3, 1862.

All the wounded have been removed to the hospitals and properly cared for by the surgeons in attendance. Many of the wounded rebels, including a Colonel, two Captains, and a large number of privates, were left behind in the old huts and houses on and in the vicinity of the battle-field. Every rebel I have interrogated with, expressed their surprise at the kind treatment they have received of our hands. They say their officers tell them we hang or shoot all prisoners brought in; they say, also, if the people of Richmond only knew the truth, they would hoist again the old flag over the State-house.

The terrible battles of Saturday and Sunday, so disastrous to the Confederates, have converted even the most rigid Secessionists to the belief of the hopelessness of holding Richmond. They have sufficiently left now in their ability to defend it. The flower of their army was led against our weakest point, and reaped instead of victory, ignoble defeat.

The contrabands whom I mentioned in my last letter as driving a stage which we captured, say that not more than seven regiments are between here and Richmond at the present time. They say the rebels threw away their guns, knapsacks and accoutrements in their rapid flight on Sunday, back to Richmond. Their officers strove to rally their scattered fragments, and press the runaways to fight, stating they had whipped us, and begging them not to desert at the moment of victory; but the men had been urged on to many an unequal combat before, with the same story, and refused to obey.

The fall of Richmond will take place without another battle. The rebel ranks, composed mostly of conscripts, look that feeling of desperation and spirit of determination belonging to their leaders, the originators of the rebellion. They, from necessity, must fight, as no mercy will be shown them for their acts, from an outraged and deluded people.

BURYING THE DEAD.

Our forces are now engaged in burying the dead, and many a sad scene the eye witnesses. Lying in the wood, in front of a small house, temporarily used as a hospital, the dead body of one of our Lieutenants lay. His death must have occurred instantly, for just below his eye a Minié ball entered, taking off in its flight a portion of the back part of his head. The rebels had turned his pockets inside out, much in the style of the ancient highwaymen; not the least scrap of paper could be found about his person, affording the slightest clue to his identity. He was a young man, quite handsome, with black hair hanging in curls over his pallid forehead. I thought what a priceless treasure one of these same curls would be to those who knew and loved him.

A fifer and drummer were found close together. The fifer was in a sitting posture leaning against a tree; a ball had passed through his heart, his fife was clasped in his fingers. The drummer-boy seems to have been his companion, and was probably in the act of supporting the expiring fifer in his arms, when he himself was killed by a ball going through his head; his drum lay at his feet, both heads knocked out.

Some of the dead rebels were found with pieces of paper pinned on their clothing, giving their name, with a request that they might be properly buried, and their graves marked, so that when the war was over their remains could be found by their relatives and friends, if they should wish to remove them to rest by the side of their kindred. Their requests will be religiously fulfilled by our men. But what a contrast to the treatment our dead receive when the rebels are the victors!

The retreat of the rebels on Sunday was too precipitate to allow them time to remove all the property captured on the field. The greater portion of our camp property they left behind. Had our skirmishers reached the vicinity of Fair Oak Station five minutes before they did on Sunday, the rebel train, loaded with our commissary stores, would have been taken without doubt. As it was, they were compelled to leave the property they had ready near the depôt for transportation. The rebels left a large quantity of their arms on the field, and strewn along the road to Richmond, which our men are now bringing in. They are principally of English manufacture; the majority are Enfield rifles.

A CHANGE OF FEELING.

A great change has come over the most noted Secessionists of this region. Judge Mason and Judge Caper intend calling a meeting of their fellow-Secessionists in the county, to devise ways and means to stop the war. An acknowledgment of the supremacy of the Constitution is the only means that can be devised.

INCIDENTS.

Gen. PALMER is safe. He was not even wounded. Gen. JAMESON had his horse shot from under him on Saturday. His gallantry was most conspicuous during the fight.

Col. ABBOTT, of the First Long Island Regiment, behaved admirably. He sat on his horse smoking his pipe as the battle progressed, directing the movements of his regiment with the coolness of a veteran. When suffering from a heavy infilading fire of a superior force of the enemy, he gave the order to fall back, and said: "Now, boys, don't think, because you are going to turn your backs to the enemy that you're retreating; I want you in another part of the field." It is needless to say, the regiment retired in good order.

The Anderson Zouaves lost heavily. Col. RIXEY was killed at the head his troops.

Gen. KEARNY led the charge of the Thirty-seventh New-York, which decided the action on Saturday in our favor.

Col. COCHRANE'S Regiment of Chasseurs lost twelve killed and about twenty wounded. At one time, when the battle was raging fiercely, it was thought they had been taken prisoners by the enemy.

Gen. CASEY states, the rebels deceived his pickets with a white flag. From this deception they unfortunately allowed the enemy to come so near our lines, which resulted in the surprise of his division by a superior force.

Col. CAMERON, of the Ninety-third Pennsylvania Regiment, is reported wounded.

Drs. SIMES, PARRISH and GALBOUT, of HOOKER'S Division have been very assiduous in their attention to the sick and wounded. M.

A Letter from the Right Wing—The Sound of the Great Battle on the Left—Reports from the Battle-field—The Right Wing Not Brought Into Action—Use of the Balloon and Telegraph.

CHICKAHOMINY BRIDGE ON THE CHICKAHOMINY RIVER, Sunday, 11 A. M., June 1, 1862.

Yesterday the left wing of our army was engaged with the rebels, and, judging from the sound of cannon and musketry, the battle must have been a severe one. Reports occasionally reached us to the effect that a portion of our army fell back during the first part of the engagement, but were subsequently rallied by Gen. HEINTZELMAN, who, I understand, has command of the left wing, and pushed forward vigorously, causing the rebels to abandon their position and retreat some distance. The loss is believed to have been heavy on both sides. The right wing of our army was not engaged.

This morning the firing was resumed at daylight on our left, Gen. HEINTZELMAN holding the same position that he occupied last night. There is more of musketry than artillery firing at the present writing, which has been the case all the morning. Yesterday, however, the artillery firing predominated.

A portion of the right wing are now drawn up in line of battle near the river, on this side, while the remaining portion are just at the rear, waiting for the pontoon bridges to be thrown across, in order to reach the opposite side. The right wing will cross at four different points, one point being Chickahominy Bridge. Eight batteries of artillery, 48 pieces, are in position on different heights and plains, ready to open fire to cover the advance of the troops when the forward movement shall have commenced.

The right wing would have been across the river early this morning, had it not been for a freshet, which has swollen the river to such an extent that the meadows on each side, at points where we designed crossing, are inundated, making the passage over them extremely difficult and tedious, and also rendering it necessary to increase the length of the pontoon bridges a hundred or more feet. A torrent of rain which fell Friday and the succeeding night, seems to have overflowed not only the river itself, but also all its tributaries. We shall doubtless be across the river in one hour's time.

Railway cars were heard running all through the night, and it is presumed that the rebels are hurrying up reinforcements. Their pickets can be seen across the river and about one mile from it. They had two guns in position at the right of the Chickahominy bridge an hour ago, from which they fired six rounds. Since then the guns have been withdrawn into the woods.

Prof. LOWE has made two ascensions above sunrise, and made minute reports of his observations, which have been telegraphed to headquarters, the apparatus for that purpose having been brought upon the ground and put into operation yesterday. Notwithstanding the telegraph facilities, orderlies are continually arriving at the balloon headquarters, for the purpose of conveying important dispatches to the commanding Generals.

11:00 A. M.—Two pieces of our artillery have just opened fire on the enemy. No reply as yet from the other side.

A telegram announces that the left wing has driven the enemy back to within four miles of Richmond. There has been no firing on the left wing for the past twenty minutes.

One of the most remarkable occurrences of the war may here (this moment) take place. Professor [illegible] telegraphic operator, situated in Prof. LOWE'S balloon, at an elevation of one thousand feet, with one end of the telegraph wire attached to the car, is freely and rapidly communicating with the Department of War. This is certainly an ingenious and valuable method of giving instantaneous information. The Secretary of War is now anxiously consulted with the progress of the two armies, and will know immediately of any change in his place.

A heavy battle on our right wing is imminent, and it is liable at any moment to engage our whole line.

I must close this dispatch here, in order to transmit it by the first mail.

LETTERS BEFORE THE BATTLE.

A Skirmish—Movements of the Rebels—Hiding of Confederate Men in the Bushes at Hanover Court-House—Killed by Lightning.

CHESAPEAKE BAY, Va., Saturday, May 31.

Yesterday morning the rebels opened fire from one of their pieces, situated on a hill at the left of the road that approaches Mechanicsville from this point, directing it toward the Fifth Vermont Regiment, which had been sent out to do picket duty. That regiment advanced into an open field, thereby exposing themselves to the rebels, but retired into the woods before any casualties had occurred, after a few rounds of shell had been dropped among them.

Gen. MCCLELLAN is actively engaged in marshaling his forces to meet the enemy on the other side of the Chickahominy. The rebels are by no means idle, and are improving the little time we are giving them by concentrating their forces a point this side of Richmond, planting batteries on commanding heights and throwing up earthworks, and digging rifle-pits

THE CASE OF THE STEAMSHIP BERMUDA.

By the screw steamship City of New-York, Capt. Pearse, which sailed from Liverpool on the morning of the 22d and from Queenstown on the 23d, we have files of the English papers up to that date. A brief summary of the news has already been received by telegraph.

The privateer Sumter still remained at Gibraltar when the 23d left.

The London financial journals had given currency to a report that an armistice had been proclaimed in Virginia, but the news by the North American soon proved it to have been false.

Contributions had been received from New-York for the relief of the distress of Lancashire.

The last private accounts received from Lyons state that the recent success of the Federalists and the exit of M. Mascras, the French Minister, to Richmond, had raised the drooping spirits of the silk manufacturers in that city. Several purchases on speculation had been made under the impression that the civil war in America is about to be put an end to by the intervention of the English and French Governments. In the meantime great distress prevails both in Paris and the Departments.

The Paris correspondent of the London Morning Post writes: "I believe I am correct in saying that the Emperor has decided on withdrawing the expedition from Mexico as soon as possible now that the English and Spanish forces have retired. There is every reason to believe, according to late intelligence, that past French demands and future guarantees will be accorded by the Mexican Government. Negotiations are now probably taking place, and as soon as they are completed the main body of the French army will immediately return home."

The Viceroy of Egypt had arrived at Paris.

M. Mazas' office in Paris has been occupied by the Municipal Guard, and his clerks ejected.

The inhabitants of Rome are convinced that the fall of the temporal power of the Pope is near at hand.

A Berlin telegram of the 19th says: "It is asserted, in well informed quarters, that a Prussian ultimatum has been dispatched to Cassel, demanding the dismissal of the Ministry within forty-eight hours after its presentation, on account of the insulting treatment to which Gen. WILLISEN, the King's Envoy, had been subjected. On the notification of this determination, the Prussian Ambassador at Cassel broke off diplomatic relations with the Hessian Government, and the Ambassador of Hesse at Berlin was recalled."

The Allemano of Milan publishes a manifesto from Kossuth, calling on the Magyars, Sclavonians and Roumains to unite in a confederation.

The Montenegrins took Niksich by assault, capturing 500 men, 27 officers and 22 guns. A later dispatch says the Montenegrins only occupied the town of Niksich—the citadel remaining in the possession of the Turks. The Turks had taken the whole Province of Kolashi.

Private telegrams from China state that there were serious complications at Shanghai; that war was speedily declared with the Taepings, and that the British Admiral had been severely wounded.

AMERICAN AFFAIRS IN PARLIAMENT.

DISRAELI AND PALMERSTON ON THE RELATIONS OF LORD LYONS AND M. MERCIER.

In the House of Lords, on the 19th ult., Mr. DISRAELI said:

The other night I made a statement illustrative of the relations that existed between the Governments of France and England with regard to America. I ventured then upon the House that it was consistent with our cordial relations with France to hear the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs inveigh against the foreign policy of country, but I said I thought, at the same time, that if there were any place where France and England had a common object, and should have a common course of policy, it was America; notwithstanding which, I regretted to add, word had reached my ears that there was the same want of accord between the representatives of the two Governments there which we find in other places. I did not say much on the subject; it was a delicate one. But I said that there was a sort of constant misgivings, an attempt to obtain rival influence, which, considering that they were accredited to the President of a Republic, and were in direct communication with the Minister of a Republic, seemed to me quite out of place, and more in keeping with the intrigues round the capricious tyrant of a Divan. I said that; I could have said a great deal more. I refer to a past debate, with the permission of the House, because this is a personal matter. The noble Lord, when he replied, contradicted me on that head in terms which, allow me to say, are neither social nor Parliamentary. (Laughter.) The noble Lord said the statement was false. Well, I did not interfere at the moment, because to tell the exact truth, I really was too pleased to see the noble Lord at the end of a long debate disposing himself with so much vigor. (great laughter and cheering.) That I could not bring myself to interrupt him by an interference, which would not have been angry, but which would have been serious. But I also thought probably this House would believe that one sitting, however unworthily, the position which I now occupy, would not have made a random statement on such a subject. (Cheers.) I knew the matter would keen, and there-fore being here again, I must tell the noble Lord that I believe the statement that I made was most accurate, and although, from its particular character, it is not capable at this moment of mathematical proof, before very long, perhaps, there may be even on the table of this House, but certainly in a form much less tedious, sufficient proof of that statement.

Lord PALMERSTON replied:

He (Viscount) stated on a former evening that Washington was the scene of intrigue between the English Minister and the French Minister; that they were undermining each other by their intrigues. I stated that which the right honorable gentleman made his statement, and I repeat the denial now. (Cheers.) Every one who knows Lord Lyons knows that a man like him, so honorable and straightforward in his dealings, would be incapable of intriguing and plotting against his colleague. I have heard, I believe, that Mr. Mercier has written his Government that he was mistaken in the opinion he had formed of Lord Lyons's character, and that he was incapable of doing anything which he and his Government could not manfully avow. (Hear, hear.) Therefore, I must again assure the right honorable gentleman that he has been totally misinformed, and with regard to the assertion which he has made, at the same time there are persons who, by the extreme simplicity of their character (laughter and cheers)—are led away—are induced to believe easily and hastily that which seems to them to be authoritative when they suppose it to be possessed of accurate information. (Renewed laughter and cheers.) Whatever the right honorable gentleman may think of Lord Lyons's conduct, I again assure him that he is completely mistaken as regards our relations and the French Minister at Washington. Lord Lyons and M. Mercier, I am happy to say, are in constant and friendly communication—neither of them has done anything without communication with the other. There has been no complaint; there has been what I may call joint action. The two Ministers have worked and cooperated almost as if representing the same Government; and they have exhibited the most perfect good faith towards each other in their negotiations with the Cabinet of Washington. (Hear, hear.)

THE NEW SLAVE-TRADE TREATY.

Earl RUSSELL, in laying on the table a copy of the treaty concluded between the United States and this country for the suppression of the Slave-trade, made a few remarks which were very indistinctly heard in the gallery. He was understood to say that the present Government of the United States had shown great anxiety to adopt stringent measures for the extinction of that nefarious traffic. Their Lordships were aware that for some years past there had been great facilities afforded to persons at New-York to fit out slavers. Those slavers went afterward to Havana, and thence to the coast of Africa. Her Majesty's Government were fully informed of the names of the persons who fitted out these slavers, and their arrival was admiral and captains on the African coast on the subject. Owing, however, to their using the American flag, these slavers were enabled to escape from search by our cruisers, and their operations consequently could not be checked. But President Lincoln's Government had given orders for the entire suppression of the slave trade, and had also taken effectual steps to break up the practice of fitting out slavers at New-York for the purpose of carrying [illegible] required, other [illegible] factual suppression of the trade [illegible] treaty had been concluded [illegible] Hawaii and Long Island; and he [illegible] portunity of [illegible] of the sincerity of feeling and purpose for the suppression of the slave trade, which, since the election of the present President, had characterized the Government of the United States. The treaty gave extensive powers of search to the cruisers of both nations, and he had now the honor to lay it on their lordships' table.

The Bishop of Oxford took the earliest opportunity of expressing the great satisfaction with which he had heard the announcement just made by the noble Earl, a measure which, as their lordships knew, he had long deeply at heart. He believed this was the step in the right direction which was so much needed to render our efforts for the suppression of the Slave-trade effectual. He had long [illegible] with the United States, such as the noble Earl had just laid on the table, that the American flag should not cover the ill-conditioned of any nation engaged in the Slave-trade, the long services and sacrifices of this country would be effectual for its final suppression. (Hear, hear.)

Earl STANMORE, in expressing the same satisfaction which he was sure was shared in by all their lordships, had only to ask this question—whether the treaty which the noble Earl now laid on the table, was merely for a term of years, or indefinite in its extension.

Earl RUSSELL replied that the treaty was to continue for ten years in the first instance; but it was renewable at the expiry of that term, if its renewal then be considered necessary.

Seizure of the British Steamship Bermuda.

The following is a copy of a letter from Capt. WEMMESCOMB, of the steamship Bermuda, to the owners in Liverpool, published in the London Times of the 20th ult.:

PHILADELPHIA, May, 5, 1862.

DEAR SIR: You will, no doubt, be astonished when you receive this, informing you of the seizure of the Bermuda by a Federal war-vessel. I shall give you the facts of the case as briefly as possible, and leave you to judge for yourself of the high-handed affair.

Having received instructions at Bermuda to proceed to Nassau, I left that place on the 26th ult. for the latter port. On Sunday, the 27th ult., at 4 A.M., we made Abaco Light, bearing S.W. half S., distant not more than 10 miles; wind at the time very light from the eastward, and the vessel going along about [illegible] knots. We were steering at the time directly for the Light. At about 5 A. M. we made a steamer to windward of us, and on looking at her through the glass found that she was coming down towards us. In a short time she displayed at her peak the American ensign. Immediately had ours hoisted, and as we were drawing near the land, hauled the vessel up half a point to the southward. I was surprised in a little while to hear the booming of a gun from the steamer, but, not dreaming for a moment that they had a bright or would dare board an English vessel in English waters, I kept on my course. After some time had elapsed I observed that the American steamer luffed up, and in a few moments the curling smoke gave notice of another gun—this time a shotted one. The shell came whistling over our heads, in between the mainmast and the smoke-stack. I immediately stopped the engines and waited for her. It was at this time twenty minutes to 6 o'clock, Abaco Light-house bearing about southwest, half south, distant, in the opinion of all on board, between seven and eight miles at most. When the steamer came up alongside of us, the officer on deck hailed and asked where we were from, and where bound. I replied, "From Bermuda, bound to Nassau." He said he would send a boat on board. When the officer came on board he demanded my papers. I showed him the register, the clearance from Bermuda, and the manifest. He said he would take them on board and show them to his captain. After a little while he returned, saying that the captain wished to see me on board. Leaving the vessel in charge of Mr. REED, my first officer, I went on board the American steamer, which I found to be the Mercedita, Capt. SHERWOOD. He received me in a gentlemanly manner, asking me if I were the only captain of the Bermuda, to which I replied "Certainly." He then wished to know how it was that we had so many military stores. I told him I took my cargo in at Liverpool. "Then," said he, "that vessel must be searched." Detaining one on board, he despatched three boats, with officers and men armed to the teeth. As soon as they got alongside the officer asked Mr. REED if he was in command of the Bermuda. Mr. REED answered, that he was, during my absence. Said the officer: "I'll relieve you of your charge." They then took entire control, put two engineers down at the engines, and placed armed sentinels at every hatch and door. The Mercedita, while the search was progressing—and which was done effectually, paying no respect to private papers, bills, or anything else—steamed ahead and sung out to the officer in charge to follow, she steering directly off the land, N. E. by E. This, it is evident, was done to get out of sight, and where they would not be likely to be disturbed, as they never even hailed down the English flag until three hours after they had taken charge of the vessel, and were about 30 miles from the land.

As a matter of course, when the Captain informed me that he would have to seize the ship, which was before he had received any report from the officer who was sent to conduct the search, I told him to recollect that I protested against the act as an illegal one, and should claim the protection of the British flag, to which he replied, "Oh, yes, certainly. I was sent out to look after you."

Some of the officers subsequently informed me that they had a list comprising quite a number of British steamers that they were ordered to seize wherever they might catch them, and that if we had passed the Mercedita, two other steamers were cruising inside of the Providence Channel and just around the port of Nassau, which would have been certain to take us; in fact, that the harbor was well blockaded.

After the search was over, the whole of my ship's crew were transferred, with their luggage, as were also our passengers, to the Mercedita, and a prize crew put on board the Bermuda. The passengers were afterwards allowed to go back on board, and proceed to this place in the vessel. The only persons of my crew who were permitted to remain on board were Mr. REED and another officer, the steward, stewardess, the cabin-boy and myself.

At 4 o'clock P. M. of the same day both vessels got under way, and steered to the northward, the Mercedita leading the way. She kept company with us until the following day, at about 2 P. M., when, after a visit from Capt. SHERWOOD and other officers, we were allowed to proceed alone. The behavior of the officers has been gentlemanly throughout, and Lieut. ABBOTT, who brought the vessel to this port, has done everything to make our time pass pleasantly.

Yesterday (Sunday,) being permitted to go on shore, I called on Mr. KORNEGAY, Her Majesty's Consul, to whom I related the circumstances connected with the seizure of the vessel. He requested me, as soon as we had given our depositions to the Prize Commissioners, to call at his office and note a protest, when he would communicate immediately with Lord LYONS. Having been engaged the whole of to-day before the Commissioners, I have not been enabled to see the Consul, but shall do so early to-morrow.

You will please write to me by return mail, and if you do not send an agent out, be kind enough to instruct me how I am to obtain funds wherewith to defray expenses for legal advice, &c. I am, dear sir, respectfully, &c., C. W. WESTENDORFF.

Tone of the Press.

A FIGURATIVE FORECASTING.

From the London Times, May 19.

The Federals are working out the old metaphor, and eating up the South leaf by leaf, as a man would eat an artichoke. It is a pleasant occupation to one, not too hungry, leisurely inclined, and with plenty of time on his hands; but the artichoke is not a vegetable exactly adapted to a passenger who has but ten minutes for his dinner, and who has to make his way by the express train, which will not wait. New-Orleans was a very large leaf quietly pulled off and peacefully discussed, and now Yorktown is another, enjoyed with equal ease and comfort. To a military mind the evacuation of Yorktown will probably cause no very great astonishment. So long as the enormous terror inspired by the Merrimac continued, Yorktown was a good strategic position. Directly it became known it began to be suspected that the Merrimac was not likely to repeat the achievement of Hampton Roads; there was a strong possibility of a fleet of ship-of-war and transports running by the river forts on the York River and the James River, and landing an army in the rear of the Confederate lines, thus cutting them off from Richmond, and getting them between two fires. MAGRUDER might possibly have been glad of an opportunity to annihilate, in two blows, a thus divided enemy; but it is not in accordance with what we know of Confederate tactics to seek any such dangerous opportunities. The Fabian policy has hitherto been the policy of the South. They have from the first been hoping that something might turn up. Originally they believed Europe would come to a mass to rescue King Cotton. Disappointed in that, they were convinced that the North would be divided, and then that the funds would fail. Now they are probably living partly upon the remnants of all these broken hopes, and partly upon the anticipation that the basis of Secession will melt away the basis they cannot vanquish. Delay they think to be equal to victory, and to some extent they are doubtless right. But it is a policy which may be carried too far, and, as by bit, they may give up so much that they may at last have no[illegible] left to fight for. The danger of being surrounded, would, however, appear to be a sufficient strategic reason for their last achievement in abandoning their Yorktown lines.

Now the capture of Richmond would be a tremendous victory to the Federals. The numberless arms of the great invasion are stretched out over the whole land. The Mississippi may be said to be forced throughout its entire length, and wherever ships-of-war can float no Confederate force can show itself in safety. War has been carried on upon a scale never before heard of, at a cost never before thought possible, and upon principles which to other Europe were thought the wildest delusions. The soldier who lived upon his pay, and spent half-a-crown out of sixpence, is dead, and his sixpence. But here is another, the soldier, spending on both sides a shilling and a half sterling a day upon an income of twenty-one shillings, and going on joyously with no lack of recruits. We did not expect this in Europe. People at a distance cannot comprehend the strength, the resources, the Tulip Mania, the Dream Dahlia, the great Darien scheme, the Vigo Bay of Southern hearts these days, and, perhaps, the Eldorado. The war, we believe, are things which Europe looks upon with wonder and astonishment, and also astounded that great states do not do as they do. Here is this great bubble of American finance swelling and swelling before one's eyes, and we all think it must burst to-morrow. Yet it goes on. This gigantic bubble may, therefore, last for some time yet; long enough, perhaps, to take Richmond, and drive the Confederates back to some other strategical point, and when the Federals get there and disperse them. It is not the less real for the moment because we know this fabric of fairy credit to be short-lived. All the millions and hundreds of millions which we see flying about are like the sparks that fly upwards from a bouquet of fireworks; but, amid all this evanescent glory, what is real is that Mr. LINCOLN is discovered in the blaze leisurely but resolutely eating his artichoke.

[illegible] the last leaf, and has been daintily prepared and swallowed the core, there is yet another operation—he will have to digest it. When all military organization in the South has been dislocated, and all social and commercial organization is also broken down, when Richmond is subdued and Norfolk is taken, when Savannah has a Northern garrison, and New-Orleans is being vigorously galvanized into commercial action, when BEAUREGARD is a name of the past, and JEFFERSON DAVIS has been so dealt with that Northern statesmen lose their interest in the extraordinary outpourings of his condemnation when all these things have happened, then will begin the terrible nightmare caused by the necessary process of attempting to digest that delicious artichoke. Some of the Northern statesmen already profess to their friends that the thought of what must be done with the South, when it has been conquered, haunts them in their dreams. We hear it has already been proposed at Washington to cut this knot by calling the conquered States as Territories by Governors appointed by the President, and approved by the Senate, as in the case of foreign appointments. It is seven millions of the Anglo-Saxon race whom it is proposed thus to rule. What will be the numbers and the cost of the military and naval force necessary to do it? Is this what is meant by restoring the Union? If so, then the capture of New-Orleans and the occupation of Yorktown may be steps to that long-wished for end. But if Mr. LINCOLN proposes to himself first to pull to pieces and eat out the sweetness of his artichoke, and then put it together again with its leaves all crisped and green, the more of those leaves he pulls off the further he seems to is to be from any chance of ever completing his original object.

THE CAPTURE OF NEW-ORLEANS AND EUROPEAN RECOGNITION.

From the London News, May 19.

The direct political results of this great success are, however, all-important. The possession of the Mississippi settles at once, and in the most decisive manner, some of the most vital questions at issue in the war. It altogether destroys the political position and territorial prestige of the Southern Confederacy. The claim of the revolted States to independence at home and recognition abroad, has from the first largely rested on their extent of territory, command of frontiers, and power of self-defence—in a word, on their geographical and political self-sufficiency. This plea is now destroyed. It is no longer possible to attempt any justification of the rebellion, or to urge its recognition, on this ground. The revolted States never were, as they claimed to be, a great and powerful Confederation; and they have now lost all chance of ever gaining such a position. Had they been successful in the field, had they been able to hold even one of their chosen frontiers, they might still perhaps have urged a feeble claim to be considered an independent State capable of separate government and efficient self-defence. But with the chosen frontier lines, and strongest military positions of the new State in the hands of the North, such a claim becomes irrelevant and even absurd. With the Mississippi and its tributaries at the command of the North, what chance would any Southern Government have of independent political action, what means of permanent or efficient self-defence?

AN APPRECIATIVE VIEW OF AMERICAN FINANCE.

From the London News, May 20.

The financial position of the United States, after twelve months of civil war, while it sorely puzzles our mechanical politicians, furnishes a striking proof of the constancy of a free people, and of the true wisdom of their rulers in relying on that constancy, as their recent triumphs in the field. Four months ago, there was no way of seeming wise so easy as predicting the speedy collapse of the Federal cause from sheer want of money. The world was warned by grave authorities on this side of the ocean that Federal insolvency was imminent, and Federal ruin and repudiation near at hand. America, in her exigency, had resolved to raise four-fifths of the extraordinary charges for the war by way of a loan and one-fifth by taxation. But a community unaccustomed to draw quietly in fiscal harness was sure to kick against a load even thus comparatively light; and from the moment Treasury notes were made a legal tender national bankruptcy might be said to have begun. Vainly it was urged by those who, like ourselves, had not forgotten our own financial history, that England sixty years ago had done the like without the pressure of an equal need, and that for eighteen years the commerce and revenue of an Empire engaged in war with half the world had been carried on by means of a paper currency. With far more sincerity than that affected by the enemies of popular Government we deplored the necessity which had compelled the adoption of such measures in the present case; but recognizing their urgency, we believed in the judgment and foresight of the men who adopted them. We took for granted that they understood far better than their European censors the spirit of the nation with which they had to deal; and that, if they did not see moral and social reasons for confiding in its power and will to honor the heavy drafts on its endurance, they would never have staked the national reputation and stability on their being accepted and met. Well, what has happened? Every dollar which the Government of Washington required to borrow has been raised within the Union, promptly and at moderate rates of interest, and, as we know, every dollar has been expended nearly as fast as raised. Government securities, repayable at variously deferred periods, have been given for the vast sums so borrowed, and these securities have been made by law a legal tender. But instead of dropping to a ruinous discount, as certain reactionary prophets amongst us would have had the world anticipate, Treasury notes are actually at three per cent. premium, and United States Stock is in demand at 99 in the Money Market of New-York. There is nothing to be compared to this for grandeur in the annals of European finance. In the midst of a terrific struggle, in which every energy and resource of the country is needed, with an army of 700,000 men to raise, pay, feed, discipline, and equip at the excessive cost which, proverbially, attends urgency; and with a numerous flotilla of gunboats and iron-clad vessels-of-war to construct and arm, excise duties reaching every article of comfort or luxury have been imposed without a murmur of discontent, and public credit continues to be unfalteringly sustained at a figure which the Exchequers of Monarchy seldom hope to attain.

A Letter from Garibaldi.

To the Editor of the Times:

SIR: It is to my knowledge that Italian arms have fallen into Turkish hands. I am assured that the transport of these arms has been effected by English vessels from Gelata to the place where they were destined for the Musulman Government, which is said to be disposed to give them back again, should the English Government not object to it.

Generous and free England can surely not allow that their own Government should be the cause of those arms remaining any longer in the possession of the Turk. I appeal, therefore, to your justice and courtesy to publish this letter, in order that the matter may call forth an interpellation in Parliament. I thank you, and send you the expression of my gratitude in anticipation of your favor.

LOCAL INTELLIGENCE.

Thirtieth Annual Meeting of the New-Jersey Railroad and Transportation Company.

THE ANNUAL REPORT—FINANCIAL AFFAIRS OF THE ROAD IN A SATISFACTORY CONDITION—HARMONIOUS RE-ELECTION OF DIRECTORS—HONORS TO THE DEPARTED—SOCIAL AMENITIES, ETC., ETC.

The thirtieth annual meeting of the New-Jersey Railroad and Transportation Company took place at the new shops in East Newark yesterday morning. There were about two hundred stockholders and their friends present. Hon. WALTER RUTHERFURD presided, and Messrs. R. T. SCHUYLER and R. M. HAYNE acted as Secretaries. Among the gentlemen of note present were Hon. NEHEMIAH PERRY, Hon. D. S. GREGORY, Col. KEAN, of Elizabeth; E. Y. ROGERS, of Rahway; JOHN ELLIS, of Burlington; N. TRUSS, of Rahway; L. A. SMITH, of Newark; J. McDONALD, of Newark, and many others of note in the State.

The minutes of the last meeting were read by Mr. H. J. SCHUYLER, and adopted.

The annual report was read by the Secretary and General Superintendent, Mr. F. WOLCOTT JACKSON. The following is a brief abstract of the document:

ABSTRACT OF THE ANNUAL REPORT.

The Company has been organized just thirty years. During the past year three of the Directors have been removed by death. Nearly three million of passengers was carried without loss of life or limb to any in the care. The total number of passengers transported since the road was built is upwards of 30,000,000. The gross receipts of the past year were $131,114 43 less than the year previous, and the expenses $30,374 83 less, showing a decrease in the net earnings of $99,739 60. The rate of expenses to earnings is increased this year, owing to a withdrawal of the business of connecting lines—the New-York and Boston and Hudson and Berkshire from which was carried a [illegible] portion of the increase of expense. Though the [illegible] year cost $[illegible] less passenger [illegible] of the road, the [illegible] was $[illegible] and the [illegible] State of New-Jersey, $[illegible]. The total amount paid the State of New-Jersey for the year was $[illegible]. Notwithstanding this, there were added to the [illegible] account, after paying a dividend of 10 per cent, $41,103 72. The surplus earnings, on the 1st of January last, were $[illegible]. The expenses per mile for 1861 is 64 cents—a fraction less than for 1860. The accounts for this year are much improved, the balance chargeable being $[illegible] in excess of last year, and a slight increase over that of the corresponding period of any previous year. In June the receipts were $270,762 26, in 1861 $269,854 13, and in 1860 $[illegible]. The expenses for the same period are slightly decreased as compared with last year.

The total funded debt of the Company is now $628,000. The office in New-York has been removed to No. 2 Nassau-street, corner of Wall.

The road-bed and machine shops have been found sufficient to accommodate the diminished business, but no additional permanent improvements were commenced during the year.

There are now in use, or undergoing repairs, 23 locomotives, 30 passenger cars, and 151 freight and service cars.

The Jersey City Locomotive Works are now building for the Company a powerful anthracite coal-burning engine, to be on the road during the present month, to be called "A. E. Dennis," after one of the Directors; and a contract is made with the same parties for another engine, if desired, to be placed on the road about the 1st of January.

So great has been the saving in the expense of fuel by the use of coal, as compared with wood, that it is the intention of the Company in future to order only engines consuming coal, and no improvements have been made in the construction of coal-burning engines, it is now deemed better to use anthracite coal than the bituminous.

The shops at East Newark, from their convenience and the improved machinery with which they are fitted up, will considerably reduce the expense required to keep the cars in order.

The machine and smith shops still remain at Jersey City, their removal to East Newark, according to the recommendation of the stockholders, having been delayed on account of the unsettled state of affairs during the present year.

The road is reported in excellent condition, and the business has been much facilitated by an arrangement with the American Telegraph Company, providing a single wire, with branches, and an office at each station, greatly aiding the regulation of trains, despatch of extra engines, &c.

The facility with which boats have been forwarded without interfering with the regular trains, is noticed, and the report, on this point, further says:

The impression that we have received a large profit from this service is erroneous. The business is done at a much increased cost, the trains doubling the road one way empty, generally delayed a long time after orders to be in readiness are given, and the cars always more or less injured, while the fare received for the same is only two-thirds of the regular fare for one way.

Our Company, in common with its connections, have from the first tendered all our resources to Government, at prices as low and in some instances lower than the tariff of rates adopted by Government and furnished to us.

Our resources, if all taken for the transportation of troops, one regular business entirely set aside for the time, would enable us to transport 10,000 men over our road in one day, and in connection with other roads under the control of the present Companies between New-York and Philadelphia, cars could be furnished to transport an army of 50,000 men with their equipments in twenty-four hours.

We have six ferryboats, all in good order. The splendid ferry-boat J. P. Jackson having been sold to the Government, and being service with Commodore Porter's Mortar Fleet, it will be necessary to replace her with a new boat.

The lease of a ferry from Jersey City to the foot of Desbrosses-street, New-York, (the Company having long since obtained property at that point for this purpose,) was purchased at a public sale from the City of New-York, and thereby secured to the Company for ten years. It is expected that a ferry will be in operation between these points early in July.

The legal difficulties having been removed, the way is now clear for the erection of the bridge over the Passaic River at Commercial Dock, Newark, straightening the route at that point, as soon as necessary.

Arrangements are in progress to shorten the time of transit from New-York to Washington, and for the greater accommodation of passengers.

The report closes with a frank tribute to the courtesy and efficiency of the employes of the Company.

Hon. D. S. GREGORY briefly called attention to the labor of the gentlemen who had made up the report, and, with that explanation, the report was unanimously accepted.

On motion of Dr. L. A. SMITH, the same Committee was appointed to examine the report, substituting EZRA NYE and JOHN KEAN in place of Geo. R. CHETWOOD and MARTIN HOWELL.

The Stockholders then proceeded to an election of Directors—Messrs. C. S. MACKENZIE, PETER S. DURYEE and CORNELIUS BAKER acting as Inspectors.

While the ballots were being cast, on motion of Hon. NEHEMIAH PERRY, the resolutions which had been passed by the Board of Directors in view of the death of General Superintendent JACKSON and Directors CHETWOOD and ACHEN were read, and unanimously approved by the Stockholders.

A motion of Hon. Mr. BLACK, that the yearly meetings of the Company should be always held at East Newark, was sent to the Board of Directors, with power, at the suggestion of Mayor ROGERS, of Rahway, and Mr. PERRY.

Gen. JOHN S. DARCY, the venerable President of the road, then made a feeling address, speaking in terms of the highest praise of the Superintendent and two Directors of the Company recently deceased. He concluded with a high compliment to the present Secretary and Superintendent, Mr. F. WOLCOTT JACKSON.

Hon. D. S. GREGORY followed in a similar address. He presented a paper, compiled at his request from the archives of the Company, showing the name and term of service of all the officers and Directors, from the commencement of the Company down to the present day. The list is remarkably illustrative of the long terms of service and great harmony which has always characterized the Company.

The Tellers subsequently announced the following as the Directors for the ensuing year, elected unanimously by the votes of 46,156 shares of the stock represented in the meeting, viz.: John S. Darcy, Dudley S. Gregory, Henry R. Remsen, Hamilton Fish, Geo. R. Chetwood, A. O. Zabriskie, Wm. Whitney, Alfred L. Demarest, Martin A. Howell.

The only alterations in the Board are to fill vacancies occasioned by death.

Business dispatched, the company sat down to a plentiful collation, supplied by the Immortal DOWNING, which received full justice, and was none the less quiet and orderly because it was conducted on strictly temperance principles.

New-York Historical Society.

ADDITIONS TO THE LIBRARY—A PAPER ON THE BATTLE OF BENNINGTON—OBITUARY NOTICES OF DR. JARVIS AND DR. RETHUNE—MR. BANCROFT'S TRIBUTE TO DR. RETHUNE.

A regular meeting of the New-York Historical Society was held on Tuesday evening, Hon. LUTHER BRADISH in the Chair.

The Librarian acknowledged the receipt of various works donated to the Society. Among other gifts were the famous Judas letter of Gen. JACKSON, and interesting manuscripts of ancient date, captured in a deserted house at Yorktown. The latter were presented by Lieut. SPENCELAYE, of Company I, First Long Island Volunteers. Ex-Postmaster W. B. TAYLOR presented a large collection of envelopes illustrative of the existing war.

The paper of the evening was read by Mr. DAWSON, who chose for his subject "The Battle of Bennington." He alluded to the critical situation of the National cause in 1776, with Gen. HOWE reinforced on the Chesapeake, Sir HENRY CLINTON in New-York, and BURGOYNE pressing down from Canada, intending, by the Valley of the Mohawk and Hudson, to join CLINTON. BURGOYNE'S troops numbered 8,000, of which 4,000 were British artillerists and 400 Indians. They had also about 140 cannon, of various calibre. It was not part of the general plan for BURGOYNE to deviate to New-England. His army was encamped at Cumberland Point, about June 20, 1777. The truth is that BURGOYNE dared not carry out his original plan, knowing that defeat was certain, should he proceed immediately through New-York. He had at first no intention to be diverted into New-England, except as a feint. He moved from the head of Lake Champlain with all possible dispatch, occupying Fort Edward, on the Hudson, from July 29, to Aug. 14, 1777. His supplies were very tardy in coming forward. It became necessary for him to procure supplies, if possible, from the Americans. The prosperous fields of Vermont afforded precisely the desired locale for his operations, and urged from various sources, while concealing his real design and plan of the campaign, commenced. The Expedition numbered, according to BURGOYNE'S reports, about five hundred, but was really composed of more men. New-Hampshire, alive to the dangers of her sister State, organized a force of three regiments, under Gen. STARK, who proceeded to Bennington, where he was Aug. 9. BURGOYNE was at Fort Edward, MILLER seven miles below, and Lieut.-Col. BAUM in his front. The expedition commanded by the latter had two sets of instructions, one open and public, but the other verbal and private, and comprising the real object of the expedition—the capture of the stores at Bennington—so cautious was Gen. BURGOYNE to conceal his purpose. At 4 o'clock in the morning of the 13th of August, Col. BAUM and his expedition moved, and after frightening all the people on the way, and meeting with no opposition, proceeded hastily toward Bennington. Col. BAUM sent dispatches to BURGOYNE, representing that his success would be easy—so confident was he that the rebels would fain at the approach of his troops. He found how strong Gen. STARK was, and, after a hard fought battle, was compelled to retreat, and push on to reach him, and there the two were joined, and Gen. STARK was [illegible] the army of BURGOYNE [illegible] by Gen. BREYMAN. The [illegible] of the defences adopted by Gen. STARK, the disposition of Gen. BREYMAN [illegible] the 16th, and of the arrival of Gen. STARK and his hardy reinforcement, with a loss of about half their numbers.

Mr. FOSTER, after complimenting Mr. DAWSON on his paper, and stating that it had been already read and highly praised by the Historical Society of Vermont, moved the usual complimentary vote, which was carried.

Judge BOSWORTH, from the Obituary Committee, presented appropriate resolutions, in view of the death of an esteemed member of the Society, Dr. N. S. JARVIS. He paid a deserved tribute to the memory of Dr. JARVIS, as a physician, a man, and member of the Society, honored in his profession, and ever mindful of the claims of history. The resolutions, in the customary form, were adopted unanimously.

Rev. Dr. OSGOOD [illegible] in view of the death of Rev. Dr. G. W. BETHUNE. At the request of the Executive Committee, Dr. OSGOOD delivered an eulogy upon the deceased. Dr. OSGOOD spoke with eloquence and feeling, speaking of Dr. BETHUNE in terms of high encomium.

Rev. Dr. DOWNE followed in pleasing reminiscences of Dr. BETHUNE, and likewise delivered a glowing eulogy.

Mr. GEORGE BANCROFT said: I regret that our venerable friend stopped short of the delineation which he was about to give us. For myself, I lost in Dr. BETHUNE one of my earliest and my dearest personal friends. I can bear testimony at all times to that large charity of his, which, combined as it was with more entire devotedness to his convictions of the truth, was as large as humanity itself. I can bear testimony also to his scholarship. Learned as he was in theology, he was one of the best classical scholars among us—one of the most devoted to Belles Lettres, and most familiar with all that was mind-elevating and instructing. I can bear testimony to his eloquence on all public occasions, and to his fidelity to every public trust which he took upon him. I speak of that trust to which he was most sincerely and most conscientiously devoted. He was also large and generous in his hospitality, and in everything that belongs to social life. So that "take him all in all," whether it be for his convictions, his broad charity and great kindness, his large and cultivated scholarship, profound acquaintance with theology, and eloquence that was always ready for the service of his country and his God, I can say that are who knew him, are not likely to look upon his like again. [Applause.]

Our Customs Revenue.

BUSINESS OF THE NEW-YORK CUSTOM-HOUSE—RECEIPTS OF THE FISCAL YEAR—LARGELY INCREASED RECEIPTS SINCE JAN. 1—PROSPECTIVE REVENUE.

A month of considerable activity at the Custom-house has just closed. The receipts for May, like those of the few months preceding, give promise of a large revenue for the year. Toward the latter part of the month the receipts were somewhat smaller than before, and symptoms of a decline in importations were apparent. The receipts at this season of the year are usually lighter than at other seasons—the importations being smaller on the near approach of Summer, and the market being in a measure supplied by the goods already imported and placed in bond. The goods now imported are principally dry goods, hides, coffee, sugar and tea—the revenue falling in a great measure derived therefrom.

Of the article of hides alone, some $600,000 worth are now monthly imported, which under the present Tariff yields but $60,000 to the Government, the rate imposed being ten per centum ad valorem. The tax bill imposes a pretty heavy tax on domestic leather, and no doubt the rate of duty on imported hides will be raised to correspond. But very few foreign articles pay so small a duty as that levied on hides. They could easily be made to yield a much larger sum than at present.

The Sub-Treasury returns for the month of May show that the receipts for Customs amounted to $4,716,354 68, a sum larger than that received during any month of the present year. The present month will close the fiscal year. From the data in our possession a correct estimate may be formed relative to the Customs receipts for the year throughout the country. The following table exhibits the monthly receipts since last June, in detail:

July, 1861	$2,009,500 36	Jan., 1862	$3,651,657 22
Aug., 1861	1,856,826 11	Feb., 1862	3,366,063 68
Sept., 1861	1,642,362 45	March, 1862	4,261,775 13
Oct., 1861	1,672,616 94	April, 1862	4,147,351 00
Nov., 1861	1,851,386 73	May, 1862	4,716,354 68
Dec., 1861	2,336,647 36	June, 1862, say	4,000,000 00

Total for the year $35,191,882 61

In the debate in the Senate on the Tax Bill Senator SIMMONS stated that the customs receipts at the Port of New-York amounted to five-eighths of the customs receipts of the country. This fact he had ascertained by careful personal investigation. Taking this as a basis of calculation, we find that the receipts this year will have been $26,206,937 10.

From the table above, it will be seen that the monthly receipts have shown a constant increase since July, 1861, not, in a single instance, having been less one month than in the month preceding. It will be seen, too, that since the opening of the present year they have been unusually large. If our estimate of the receipts for the current month be correct, (and the figures for the months of March, April and May seem to justify it,) the income at this port for the year which will end Dec. 31 will probably be about $46,000,000, or in the whole country nearly $77,000,000. This can be, perhaps, increased to $100,000,000, by judiciously raising the tariff.

These figures and estimates are of value at the present time, when the attention of Congress and the people is directed to the ways and means of carrying on the war and of paying the debts we have and will incur in its prosecution. Some comment was excited by the statement of Senator SIMMONS, that the revenue from duties would reach $100,000,000 in the coming year. We think the facts we have given justify this estimate.

Barnum's Baby Show.

PRIZES AWARDED TO ALL SORTS AND KINDS.

The infantile display at the Museum has achieved a success. In spite of the tremendous fall of rain yesterday, the inhabitants of this and the adjacent cities literally flocked to see the babies. The little ones were obliged by their contract to be there rain or shine, and many a poor youngster took his seat upon the platform with dampened socks, saturated jacket, wet trousers and soaking shoes. The premium babies were in high spirits, as were their parents, who, male and female, were in constant attendance all day long.

At 1½ Mr. BARNUM rang a huge bell in the outer hall and called the crowd to him, when he announced, in addition to the first batch of premiums, the following and last list:

The child No. 15, George Augustus Magraf, 4½ years old, took the $100 prize, as the finest child on exhibition

GENERAL CITY NEWS.

AN OLD GAME REVIVED.—A man named HENRY CLAY was brought before Justice STILES yesterday, charged with exhibiting Brass Ring Game on the prize of nine pieces of French china, in Mrs. Dunlap's fancy store at No. 204 Fourth-avenue. In February last the accused went to complainant's store, bought the chance for 25 cents. He obtained nine pieces to be sent to his office in Broadway, and he would then pay for them. A messenger was accordingly sent to the designated No. with the bundle. Questioned and cross-examined, he stuck to his story that he had no office in Broadway, and he wished, as much more or less, and said that his wife wished, as much more or less. He therefore directed that it be left at the same place. The messenger did as requested, returned with the money and receipt he received from the parties to whom he had delivered the first package. He was committed to answer.

JEWISH FESTIVAL.—The Jewish residents of this City are passing through one of their most festal seasons. In commemoration of the "grand and holy Sabbath," their Saviour, appearing to Moses on Mount Sinai, gave to him, for them, the Law from the midst of thunders and lightnings; they were assembled two days to the praise of the God of Jacob, who at that time appointed and constituted them his chosen and peculiar people. The Jewish Synagogue got, beautifully ornamented, with small evidence of thanksgiving, and the religious services, as well as the social festivities, were characterized by great cheerfulness and decorum.

CITY POSTAL DELIVERY.—There is a screw loose somewhere in the City Delivery Department. For instance, on Monday we mailed in the box at the Tribune office, at 12 M., a letter addressed to a party in West Thirty-fourth-street. The letter was delivered on Tuesday afternoon. The recent arrangements of Postmaster WARDEN promised better things than this, and we have no doubt that if the attention of the carriers is called to the importance of obeying these regulations, we should have, not only a more perfect system, but one that would be of some service.

CHILDREN FOR WESTERN HOMES.—On Tuesday afternoon, the Children's Aid Society, whose labors for the poor outcast of the City have so extensively met a way, under the charge of Mr. C. C. TRAIN, for homes in the West, a company of thirty boys and girls. They were well dressed, fine looking little men and very happy. Messrs. WARNOCK & Son beautifully filled their provision basket with good things. It is not the first time they have received an ample supply of nice cakes from the same generous source.

FIRE APPEAL COMMITTEE.—The election of a Fire Appeal Commissioner in the place of the somewhat erratic F. F. Pease, will take place on the 10th inst. The liveliest interest is taken in this election by the members of the Department, and much anxiety is felt by the true friends of the Fire Department to get a good man in the placed. Messrs. Robert Tomlinson, Jr., and Henry Parker, are the prominent candidates for the position.

FATAL POISONING.—HERMAN A. MERTEN, a German, aged 29 years, died at his residence, No. 42 Delancey-street, yesterday, from the effects of the overdose of laudanum. The deceased had been in the habitual use of that drug for the last three years, up to three months ago, when he broke off entirely. Yesterday he took about the same quantity that he had been in the habit of doing; and the result was death a few hours afterward.

COURT OF SESSIONS.—In this Court yesterday, before Recorder HOFFMAN, FERDINAND MICHAELIS was tried for assault and battery and acquitted. FRANCIS CUMMINGS pleaded guilty to an attempt at grand larceny, and was sent to the Penitentiary for three months. WM. MULLAN was put on trial, charged with keeping a disorderly house in Delancey-street, but the case was not completed at the adjournment of the Court.

THE FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE HOSPITAL SHIP.—The hospital ship Florence Nightingale was towed down to the Lower Bay yesterday, where she will remain at anchor during the Summer, for the reception of patients who may arrive at this port, sick from contagious diseases.

BROOKLYN NEWS.

[illegible] Chair. The [illegible] Committee reported the following changes in the different schools during the last month:

RESIGNATIONS.—No. 13, Miss A. E. Boynton; No. 23, Miss H. N. Vermilye, Miss M. J. Strickland; No. 24, Miss E. M. Golding; No. 26, Miss E. Kennedy; No. 6, David Syme; No. 10, Miss Kate E. Black.

PROMOTIONS.

No. 15, Miss E.C. Cornell in place of Miss Boynton.
No. 15, Miss C. Lane in place of Miss Farinder.
No. 23, Miss Mary Pickering from Primary to Grammar Department.
No. 23, Miss E. P. Bulkley in place of Miss Pickering.
No. 24, Miss H. A. Evans in place of Miss Golding.
No. 24, Miss C. Benson in place of Miss Evans.
No. 24, Miss J. E. Nesbitt in place of Miss Benson.
No. 25, Miss L. L. French in place of Miss Kennedy.
No. 25, Miss H. A. Kneebel in place of Miss French.
No. 25, Miss E. Jackson in place of Miss Kneebel.
No. 25, Miss A. Robbins in place of Miss A. Jackson.

APPOINTMENTS.

No. 3, Miss Ada Lindley to be Third Assistant in Primary Department.
No. 3, Miss Anna Suydam in place of Miss Scarles.
No. 22, Miss Emily J. Fish in place of Miss Baker.
No. 16, Miss Sarah Bryant in place of Miss Cornell.
No. 16, Miss Sarah J. Blackley in place of Miss Lane.
No. 23, Miss E. J. McMasters in place of Miss Bulkley.
No. 24, Miss E. Elliott in place of Miss Nesbitt.
No. 25, Miss Emma Mott in place of Miss Rollings.
No. 23, Miss Viola Rich, additional Teacher in Primary Department.
No. 21, Miss Anna Unger, in Primary Department.
No. 19, Miss Mary E. Moore in place of Miss Stark.
No. 8, Miss Searles in place of Miss Henry.
No. 21, Miss C. Williams, in Primary Department.

The Board passed a pleasant hour in discussing local matters of minor importance, and then adjourned for one month.

The Financial Estimate for 1863.

A meeting of the Joint Board of Aldermen and Supervisors was held on Tuesday, to consider the appropriations necessary for carrying on the City Government for the fiscal year commencing on the 1st of January next. Mayor KALBFLEISCH occupied the chair, and presented the following statement:

Gentlemen: In compliance with the provisions of the Charter, I have to lay before your honorable body a statement of the sums required to be raised to defray the expenses of the City Government for the fiscal year commencing on the 1st of January next. On examining the statement as adopted by you the last year, little or no difference will be found in the amount necessary for the Department of Common Schools, and but a small sum is made on the amount of money required for police purposes. The amount of City bonds falling due, and the amount of interest to be paid on the City debt, will exceed in amount those of the previous year by a small sum. But your honorable body will perceive that a large reduction is effected in the aggregate sum of City expenditures. To enable us to realize this reduction, rigid economy and a strict and careful scrutiny in contracting liabilities will have to be constantly exercised. The recent amendments very properly made to the charter will materially assist us in this matter. No inconsiderable amount of the money raised for the current year will be saved and rendered available for the next. In some of the Wards the balance remaining in the Treasury of the money raised for opening streets and repairing wells and pumps for the current year will be ample sufficient for that purpose, and in some instances for the whole entire year; in others, however, not, however, be the case in all. In some instances there will be a balance left, which will have been appropriated, mostly chosen, to meet the claims of the new contractors for work to be done during the balance of the present year, although their contracts are based on more favorable terms than those heretofore paid for the same class of work. The difference arises from the fact that the accounts were deficient on the 1st of [illegible], and that very large amounts have been [illegible] the past four months of this year. The [illegible] Fire Department have, owing to various [illegible], been heretofore very large, and [illegible] placed by the Charter upon the amount of [illegible] for this branch of the city service will [illegible] in excess of the amount necessary for [illegible] for the ensuing fiscal year. The [illegible] account, at rates [illegible] will be [illegible]. I have considered this in making [illegible] estimate; the amount necessary to [illegible] of eighteen cents, of the rate of [illegible] provided in the charter, has been added. NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE REBELLION.

A rain storm of great severity prevailed yesterday and last night, and interfered seriously with the transmission of news by telegraph. Our war dispatches consequently are brief. No dispatch was received from Gen. McClellan's army yesterday. We give, however, another letter from the battle-field of the Chickahominy, dated the day after the rout of the rebels, which furnishes additional interesting details.

The rebel army, which lately shoddaddled from Corinth, is being rapidly gobbled up by our pursuing forces. Gen. Halleck telegraphs to the War Department, under date of yesterday, that Gen. Pope, with forty thousand men, was then thirty miles south of Corinth, and pushing the enemy hard. He had already captured ten thousand prisoners and deserters, and fifteen thousand stands of arms, and thousands of the enemy were throwing away their arms to lighten their flight. Our forces had also captured nine locomotives and a number of cars, and one of the former had already been put in running order and was in use. According to the story of a farmer in the vicinity of Corinth, Beauregard, when he found that his communications South had been cut off by Gen. Buford, became frantic, and told his men to save themselves as best they could. Gen. Halleck expresses himself as perfectly satisfied with the result of his strategy—it being all that he could desire.

The following is the dispatch which Gen. Halleck sent to St. Louis, announcing the retreat of the rebels:

HEADQUARTERS, CORINTH, May 30, 1862.

We took possession of Corinth this morning—the enemy is retreating southward.

H. W. HALLECK, Major-General.

There is no later news this morning from the Department of the Shenandoah, and whether our forces have succeeded in pressing the rebels with sufficient closeness to force them to fight, is of course unknown. It was reported at Martinsburgh yesterday, that in addition to the force under Jackson, the rebel divisions under Longstreet and Smith were also somewhere in the Valley. Their force is estimated at from twelve to fifteen thousand men.

A private letter from the Mississippi flotilla, dated May 29, contains the following: "Twenty-nine refugees have just come in from a point about ten miles from Memphis, which place they left last Thursday. They came in with their shotguns and rifles, and said they were running from the conscript law and hanging. A more miserable set you never saw. They had to travel knee deep in water about twenty-four miles. Farragut's advance was at Napoleon when they left. Vicksburgh surrendered without firing the city. Farragut will likely be at Memphis this week."

The Nashville Union continues to notice the arrival in that city of officers and privates who have become disgusted with the rebel service at Corinth, and returned to take the oath of allegiance. It gives the names of three Captains, two Lieutenants and several privates, who thus turned from the error of their ways on May 29.

The St. Louis Evening News states that there is a general belief throughout Kentucky that a plot has been concocted by returned soldiers from the rebel army, guerrilla bands and local Secessionists, to make a sudden and simultaneous uprising in that State, destroy the railroads, burn the bridges, and march suddenly to Lexington, Frankfort and Louisville. The guerrilla chieftain John Morgan is known to be in the State, and it is thought that he is to be the leader of the movement, aided by an advance of the rebel forces from Knoxville upon Gen. Morgan's National army at Cumberland Gap. There are but few National troops in Kentucky, and if such a movement as that indicated should take place, the Unionists would have to rely upon themselves to put it down.

The advance of the Kansas Brigade, which has been ordered to join Gen. Halleck's command, arrived at St. Louis on Friday en route for Pittsburgh Landing.

Gen. Dix, it will be seen by our dispatches, has entered upon his duties at Fortress Monroe, Norfolk and Portsmouth. An order from Gen. McClellan directs that he shall exercise within his command the functions of Commander of Division of separate corps.

CONGRESS.

In the Senate, yesterday, a communication was received from the Secretary of War, transmitting the instructions given to the Military Governors of Tennessee and North Carolina. A joint resolution allowing hereafter a premium of two dollars for every accepted recruit for the regular army, and allowing all soldiers to receive a month's pay in advance, was passed. The joint resolution suspending payments in the Department of the West, was passed. The Tax bill was then taken up, and debated until 7½ o'clock, when the Senate adjourned without final action on the bill.

In the House, the first matter in order was the motion of Mr. Porter, of Indiana, to reconsider the vote by which the bill to free the slaves of rebels was rejected. After debate, the vote was reconsidered, 84 to 65. Mr. Porter offered a substitute, and moved to put it on its passage, but objection was made. Mr. Porter then moved to recommit the bill, with instructions to report his substitute, and the motion was agreed to, 84 to 65. A bill was passed which freed from disabilities those holding office under the rebel Government from holding office under the National Government. The House soon afterward adjourned.

GENERAL NEWS.

The Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the New-Jersey Railroad & Transportation Co. took place yesterday morning in East Newark. Walter Brewerton presided, and about two hundred stockholders and their friends were present. The annual report was then read, and exhibited the affairs of the road in a highly prosperous condition. The following Board of Directors was elected unanimously: John S. Darcy, Dudley S. Gregory, Henry R. Remsen, Hamilton Fish, Geo. B. Chetwood, A. C. Zabriskie, Wm. Whitney, Alfred N. Dennis and Martin Howell. The only changes in the Board are to fill vacancies occasioned by death.

The Board of Education last evening appropriated $10,915 for the erection of a school-house in the Twelfth Ward, and authorized the School Officers of the Seventh Ward to purchase lots Nos. 68 and 70 Mercer-street at the price of $10,500 for the erection of a school-house in that ward.

Brig.-Gen. Duncan, in command at Nashville, Tenn., having discovered that salt, bacon, coffee, iron, leather, medicines and other articles of prime necessity to the rebels, were finding their way through the National lines, has issued an order holding to a strict accountability any person who shall attempt to take away from that city any merchandise, without a special permit.

Cotton is coming into St. Louis quite freely from certain parts of the South. One hundred and twelve bales arrived there on Friday last. On May 29 two hundred and forty-nine bales were shipped from Nashville for the North.

The prize steamer which was taken to Philadelphia a few days ago is named Cambria, not Cambrian, as reported. The crew of the steamer is now in charge of the United States Marshal, and the papers in the hands of the Prize Commissioner.

The gunboat Ino, Capt. Gerry, from Cadiz May 1, via Fayal 13th, arrived at Boston on Tuesday. She has been absent several months, cruising in the Mediterranean and North Atlantic.

A curious case has just been decided in Baltimore. The schooner Reform and cargo were seized and libeled under the act prohibiting intercourse with the States in rebellion, and on the trial before Judge Giles, of the United States District Court, a permit was put in evidence, signed by the Secretary of the Interior, giving the schooner permission to enter certain Virginia streams to purchase cotton seed. Judge Giles held that Secretary Smith was authorized to issue this permit under the act recently passed by Congress, appropriating a sum of money for the purchase of cotton seed, and that the schooner must therefore be released. The case will be carried up.

The repairs to the gunboat Cincinnati, which was sunk by the rebel rams in the engagement off Fort Pillow, have been completed at Mound City, and by this time, probably, she has rejoined the fleet. The work upon the Eastport, which was captured on the Tennessee River after the surrender of Fort Henry, is rapidly progressing. When completed, it is expected that she will be the most formidable vessel in the flotilla. Another boat captured from the rebels, formerly the Alex. Robb, now the Lady Foote, has been equipped for service on the Tennessee.

Gov. Curtin, of Pennsylvania, has issued an order directing that the names of actions in which regiments from that State have recently distinguished themselves, shall be inscribed upon their respective standards. He says: "In issuing this order, the Governor congratulates the people of Pennsylvania on the fact that the Pennsylvania Volunteers have been everywhere distinguished for courage and efficiency in the field, and that of the 114 regiments now in the service of their country, not one has been found to belie the military virtue of the Commonwealth, or to dishonor her flag."

There was increased buoyancy in the Stock Market yesterday. The additional advance in the Railway Shares was 1¼@1½ ⅌ cent. on New-York Central, and ½@1 ⅌ cent. on other New-York and Western roads. The Government Six Per Cents. of 1881 sold at 106 ⅌ cent., the highest point yet realized since the beginning of the civil war. Gold dull at 103¼@103½; Exchange, 114@114½ ⅌ cent.

The severe rain storm, yesterday, checked business materially. A good inquiry prevailed for desirable lots of Flour and Grain, at advancing prices. Cotton was a shade firmer, and in moderate request. Groceries were quiet. Provisions were less sought after, and Pork was decidedly lower. Whisky, Tobacco and Spirits Turpentine were stiffly held, but were less active. The freight engagements were heavier. The movements in other branches of trade were restricted.

Southern Unionists—Their Part in the Work of Reconstruction.—The recent arrival from New-Orleans, of the Hon. John E. Bouligny, will perhaps recall to the minds of some of our readers, suggestions made in these columns more than a year ago, in reference to acknowledgments due by Government to the people—to the steadfast Union men of the South. We owe them much, not for their loyalty, because that is a sacred duty, the absence of which would deserve our just indignation, but for their noble conduct and splendid example, in steadfastly enduring the trials to which their fidelity in the midst of traitors subjected them, and accepting patiently, the evil consequences to themselves of blows necessarily struck at our foes, oftimes through the bosoms of friends.

Among those who have thus suffered and endured Mr. Bouligny is conspicuous. During the long year of his incarceration within the limits of the fungus confederacy, we believe he has always maintained brightly beaming his patriotic devotion to the Union so basely deserted in its extremity, by the great body of Southern public men. We know that upon the reoccupation of New-Orleans by the forces of the United States, Mr. Bouligny was the first man to greet the Union commander, and to hail with unrestrained joy the return of the National banner, emblem of the power under which he was born, whose stars have ever guided his inspirations, and whose stripes foreshadow the punishment of his persecutors.

We suggested, a year ago, that our Government should not only avail itself of the services of the Union men of the South, to reassert the supremacy of the Constitution and its obligations upon all the States, but should also, in testimony of its appreciation of their patriotism, place them in such positions that their unswerving fidelity to the Union might not prove the instrumentality for their ruin and their social ostracism. Unless the Government shall take early steps to repose the local power in the hands of these faithful men, the "neutrals," anti-coercionists, semi-Secessionists, and even full-blooded fire-eaters, will again step into place, and continue to agitate the waters whose o'ertopping waves so mercilessly swept away the forms of free Government in nearly half the States of the National Union.

Such men as Bouligny and Anderson, Hamilton and Evans, of Texas, Maynard and Andy Johnson, of Tennessee, and many others, who have kept their heads above the flood, or struggled quickly away from the abyss toward which it hurried, are so many living indexes of a latent Union sentiment in the South, which needs only encouragement to make itself seen and felt. If the Government shall give to these men, and such as these, position and authority to assist in the pacification of the South, upon the basis of that allegiance to the Union for which they have braved and endured so much, there can be no doubt as to the beneficial results of the policy. Thus far, Mr. Johnson, of Tennessee, is the only citizen of a lately disloyal State whose services have been thus secured—probably because the fit men and the convenient opportunity for their employment, have not hitherto been present. Both now seem close at hand, and we doubt not will be availed of. If in Southern men who will wield the government in the now rebel States, after they shall have been all reclaimed; and it surely will be the policy of the National Administration, to so guide the process of reclamation as to leave in the hands of the steadfast Union men those places of power which otherwise will be speedily occupied and permanently held by their late oppressors.

Rout of Beauregard's Army—The Splendid Movement of Gen. Pope.

The question with everybody for the last four days has been, Where is Beauregard's army? Swiftly, silently, and under cover, the great host stole away from Corinth; but whither it had gone, no man could tell. The whereabouts of at least a large portion of it is at last satisfactorily settled. Gen. Pope, by one of those brilliant Napoleonic movements which have placed his name first and foremost on the roll of Western Commanders, has taken prisoner ten thousand of its number, has captured fifteen thousand stand of arms, and is still in pursuit of, and scattering to the winds, that fraction of it which holds together. This is the glorious news which will make the eyes of the nation glisten this morning, and which will strike terror and dismay to the hearts of the infernal Southern traitors. The vaunting and insolent chivalry of the Cotton States is routed and disgraced. The General in whom the rebels most trusted is discomfited. An army of men who swore that they would contest every inch of Southern soil till they reached the last ditch, and then and there would fight till the last of them had been hacked to pieces, has ignominiously thrown down its arms, and resigned itself to the clemency of its captors. A General whose bluster has only been equaled by his falsehoods—who, in his efforts to fire the Southern heart, has stopped at no perfidy, scrupled at no means, however atrocious—has now fled frantically before the National army, anxious only to save his worthless life, and shouting to his deluded followers as he flees "to save themselves the best way they could." It is a fitting finale to the rebel campaign in the Southwest—a campaign which to the rebels has been but a long series of disgraces and disasters, from the day when this same Pope took prisoner four thousand of them in Missouri last Winter—down through the days and fields of Pea Ridge, Donelson, Bowling Green, Nashville, Columbus, Island Number Ten, Pittsburgh, Huntsville, New-Orleans, Pensacola, Corinth and other discomfitures too many and too pitiful to be enumerated. All that remains now is that Pope and Halleck put the finishing stroke to their week's work by breaking up entirely the fleeing host, and clutching its leaders, when the whole military force of the great rebellion will be the shivering fragment of an army now facing death at the rebel capital.

It seems that the first telegrams received from Gen. Halleck last Sunday were correct, that the rebel army of the Southwest, when driven from Corinth, had broken up into two or three columns, each column taking a different direction, and fleeing for life. A great body began to move southward over the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, but before the whole of it had effected its escape, a cavalry force was sent out from Gen. Pope's command, which, by a dashing manœuvre, got in between the moving mass, broke up the railroad, and thus cut off the retreat of the main force, who had intended to move in this line. Gen. Pope (who commanded the left wing of the National army) at once pushed forward, with forty thousand men, against this disorganized rabble; and the splendid triumph recorded this morning is the first fruits of his movement. There is no doubt that, inspired by this result, the other two corps d'armée of our Western Army will speedily discover and destroy the remaining rebel detachments wherever they may be. If, as we believe was the case, one of them made for Memphis, the forces of Buell and Thomas are so placed that their capture will be both easy and speedy.

Gen. Pope will now receive, more than ever, the admiration and applause of the nation. His present achievement is but the last of four great triumphs of the same kind. His favorite work seems to be the "bagging" of great bodies of rebels. He it was, as already mentioned and as the public will remember, who turned the tide of rebellion in Missouri by "bagging" three or four thousand of Price's men early last Winter. He it was who took New-Madrid, and the rebel force there. He it was who, by his scientific genius and by gigantic labors, reduced Island Number Ten, and captured six thousand rebels, half a dozen Generals, and untold munitions of war. His last achievement is his most glorious, and foots up the entire number of rebel soldiers he has captured to nearly twenty-five thousand. And all, too, with not the loss of a hundred lives on our side. For such a man, no honors can be too great—no applause too hearty.

This result amply justifies the strategy of Gen. Halleck at Corinth, with which some conceited critics have been lately finding fault. Whether or not we could have taken that place by storm or by a pitched battle was, like the result of all other battles before they are fought, dubious. But by driving the enemy from that place by strategic skill, and then routing them in the manner they have been routed, not only is the genius of our Generals, and the patience and courage of our army made manifest, but the disgrace of the rebels is rendered eternal.

The Rationale of Rebel Desperation.

There is to be awarded to the rebels credit for a certain amount of dash and gallantry, which under favoring conditions earns them a plausible semblance of success. The chase after Gov. Banks, the assault upon Gen. Casey, are specimens of this particular school of courage. An adversary weak in numbers and experience, and free from all apprehension of attack, is fallen upon, routed, and driven for miles, until reinforced and enabled to make a stand; when the pursuit ceases, the victors take to flight, and the net product of the enterprise is defeat and disperdom. There is impulse but no momentum. The moment the force which inspired the movement ceases to act, the movement ceases, and reaction ensues. It is a consciousness of this fact in the valorous gait of their warriors, which persuades the leaders of the insurrection to place small reliance upon the success of their cause if it be left to the arbitrament of arms. They are well assured that ultimate military superiority is out of the question. They have never been able to set foot upon Northern soil; mile by mile they see their own soil restored to the Union. The odds of the contest are all against them. If the war continues they must be ruined.

The entire energy of the rebel leaders is therefore directed to stopping the war. They task themselves to satisfy the North and Europe, that subjugation, if not wholly impracticable, must result in disaster to the material interests both of the new and old worlds. Whatever they do is done with a view to the-africal effect. As intense hatred to the Yankee will be construed into proof of the perfect irreconcilability of the two sections, the utmost latitude is given to the expression of unmitigated aversion and contempt. As the sacrifice of their property and homes is the highest evidence of indomitable resolution never to submit or yield—evidence which must satisfy Europe at least of the hopelessness of National redintegration—the sacrifice is freely offered. The North is charged with craving the Southern staples; they are destroyed simply as an attestation of the popular hate toward the North. Europe is presumed to hunger after cotton; the cotton is burned in order to impress Europe with the utter and implacable intensity of the Southern feeling. For the same reason it is quite possible that Memphis and Richmond may be leveled to the ground, not because the Southern tee requires a hecatomb, but because the demonstration may intimidate and discourage the North, and convey to the rest of the world an idea of the extremities to which Southern desperation is prepared to go.

The correlative of this active policy on the part of the rebels is found in the tone of what is called the Peace Party of the North, and of the foreign Press devoted to the fomentation of the rebellion. The burden of both is the impossibility of the Government reducing the insurgents to submission. The European advocate is supplied with facts of the most startling and frightful sort to illustrate the general temper, and to found arguments for the interference of France and England on grounds purely humanitarian. A loss of greatly needed raw material and of an invaluable market are not the inducements placed in the foreground. The question is, how long will Christendom stand idly witnessing the struggle for an independence to which they are justly entitled, of a people who will perish rather than succumb? By protracting the war, and by multiplying evidences of resolve to resist to the end of all things, the chances of foreign interposition are carried to the point of probability. Hence the whole energy of rebel advocates, whether in the North or in Europe, is confined to proving the impossibility of the task the National Government has undertaken, and the whole policy of the rebel leaders is to furnish evidence to sustain such assertions.

It is well to give these facts due weight in gauging the future of the war. The rebels do not burn and destroy because they are hopeless, but because they are still hopeful. Their acts are less the result of desperation than of deliberate calculation. When they shall become satisfied of the irremediable failure of their cause; when the cowed and terrified Unionists shall know the danger of a victorious rebel army recovering its lost ground, and punishing loyalty shall have ceased, submission and loyalty will become general throughout the Southern States. From this stage of the National disorder we are not distant.

Recognized at Last.—As President Lincoln, some months ago, in his Annual Message to Congress, declared that if there was any good reason why Hayti and Liberia should not at once be recognized by the United States, he was not aware of it, it may safely be assumed that he will have no hesitation in at once giving his sanction to the bill to that effect, which has at last passed both branches of the National Legislature. It is a tardy act—we will not say of justice—but of common sense. Liberia has grown to a condition of stability, and has been declared entitled to respect, under the law of nations, by France, Great Britain, Belgium, Prussia, Brazil, Lubec, Bremen, Hamburg, Portugal, and the Kingdom of Italy. Hayti has already had an independent existence of two generations, and has been acknowledged and treated as a nation by every Government in the world except our own. We now send Ministers Plenipotentiary to several nations, whose united intercourse with the United States is not a tithe of the commercial importance of that of either Hayti or Liberia. It is only just to say that this inconsistency has long been lamented, and many of our most enlightened statesmen and merchants have for years urged the measure whenever there appeared to be any prospect of even a hearing from those in authority. Twelve years ago Henry Clay wrote: "I have thought for years that the independence of Liberia ought to be recognized by our Government, and I have frequently urged it upon persons connected with the Administration, and I shall continue to do so if I have suitable opportunities." The one barrier all along in the way has been that despicable and disgraceful prejudice, which would deny the black race even the poor recognition of humanity. This prejudice was again made to do service in opposing the passage of the bill for the recognition of Hayti and Liberia, by the flag-end of the negrophobists, in Congress; and, characteristically enough, the meanest and most malignant speeches against it were made by Northern men. The bugaboo of the equality of blacks with whites (assumed as being contemplated by this measure,) was again trotted out; and poor Mr. Cox, of Ohio, tried his best to terrify the House into a rejection of the measure by the picture of a negro in Court dress. It is not to say very much to say that Congress had common sense enough not to be influenced by such wretched puerilities. At the same time it is gratifying that the spirit of the age has been at length recognized in this act of tardy justice.

Our Inland Coastwise Channels.

The passage of the gunboats Southfield and Port Royal from Roanoke Island to Norfolk, by the internal route, thus putting Burnside and Wool in direct water communication without the aid of the Atlantic, is an event which is not only notable as showing the progress of the campaign, but is of the greatest prospective importance, and adds new point to the question of completing that line of intra-coast navigation of which nature has given us the suggestion and the rough draft.

It is a remarkable feature in the geographical formation of our country, and which has frequently been referred to by engineers in connection with a system of National defences, that we have what may be called a second coast line near to and parallel with the shores of the Atlantic and the Gulf, and having numerous connections with those waters. As we have seen, our gunboats are already able to pass the whole distance from Roanoke Island to Norfolk by this intra-coast route—the passage being up Currituck Sound, through North River to Albemarle and Chesapeake Canal, through the latter to North Landing River, through this to Elizabeth River and Norfolk and thence to the Chesapeake. Again, still pursuing the internal channel northward, Baltimore on the Chesapeake is connected with Philadelphia on the Delaware, by the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal; while another canal—the Delaware and Raritan—joins the Delaware River with New-York Harbor. The former of these canals is but thirteen and a half miles long; the latter forty-three miles. The former is ten feet deep; the latter seven. Now, it is only necessary that these two canals should be deepened to twelve feet, and a continuous inland water communication would be afforded our gunboats and iron-clads from New-York to Beaufort.

Again, an interior channel, beginning in the Mississippi River, above New-Orleans, opening up the bed of the Iberville River (closed by Gen. Jackson in 1812-15, and not since opened), may be continued along the coast between the islands and the mainland, via Mobile and Pensacola (crossing Florida with a ship-canal), Savannah, Charleston, forming the junction again at Beaufort!

The enormous value of such an intra-coast channel is obvious. It would enable the United States to transfer our ships-of-war by a safe and speedy route, in the presence of a superior naval force, and in complete defiance of a coast blockade, from any one point on our coast to any other, and all the way from New-York to New-Orleans, while it would preserve our vast coasting trade in unimpaired activity during a war. The military value of this measure was urged by engineers more than forty years ago, but of late years Congress seems to have forgotten its importance. It has lately, however, been re-urged with renewed force by Mr. Frank Blair, Chairman of the House Committee on Military Affairs; and it is earnestly to be hoped that his cogent suggestions will receive the consideration they so well deserve. It may be, indeed, that the Government may never be called to do more than sanction by its authority, in order to secure the completion of this grand design by private enterprise; for if there is any conviction that has been developed by the war, it is that of the essential unity of our country; and this sentiment will gladly, as Mr. Blair expressed it, "bind this new ligament of strength around the nation to make its Union perpetual."

Emancipating the Slaves of Rebels.—The House yesterday voted to reconsider the slaves of rebels confiscation bill, which was rejected by a very close vote a fortnight ago. The majority for reconsideration was 21, the total vote being: for, 84; against, 65. It is not likely that the rejected bill will pass the House or become a law in its original form; but the necessity of some action in the premises is admitted on all hands. Probably not less than a hundred thousand slaves have been directly engaged in forwarding this rebellion; and leaving out altogether Slavery as the ultimate inducing cause of the revolt, it is very doubtful whether, in a military point of view, it could have attained anything like its present proportions without the labor and the aid of Southern slaves. It cannot be that this rebel live stock shall be protected and preserved for the future use of the rebels. It cannot be that we should neglect to inflict a just punishment upon the slaveholding traitors and usurpers who have plunged the country into this bloody war. Still, hasty action on a subject of such vast and enduring import is dangerous to all parties; and while justice should be inexorably administered, it should also be administered discreetly, and in such a manner as not to reflect unjustly upon those who may be innocent. There is no doubt of the correctness of the oft-made assertion, that a large part of the Southern people was forced into this rebellion. As things went, it was a virtual impossibility for them to resist it. When, then, the question of confiscation assumes a practical shape, these men should have an opportunity of proving their virtual innocence. Neither their civil rights nor their [illegible] should be interfered with without trial; and it is to be hoped that the bill which may pass Congress will make ample provision for this. It must not be forgotten that while the people of the South had a duty of fealty to the Government, the Government also had a duty of protection to them; and that the Government is morally as culpable for failing in its imperative duty as the loyal men of the South were for failing to do their whole duty. We do not say that when the protection due the Southern loyalists was for so long a time withheld, the latter were inexcusable for succumbing to the de facto powers. We only say that there was a joint culpability of citizens and Government. And as soon as the Government, by suppressing the rebellion, acts itself right toward the Southern people, the latter also should have an opportunity to act themselves right toward the Government. For convicted traitors—for those who have willingly furnished slaves to aid the rebel cause, there should be punishment and confiscation severe and exemplary; but, as we already said, in providing for this, care should be taken that the innocent do not suffer with the guilty. We are glad to learn that the feeling of Congress is in favor only of judicious legislation on the question.

The Woman of Winchester.—The double entendre in regard to the atrocities committed by the people of Winchester upon our retreating forces must yield to irresistible evidence. Gen. Gordon, who commanded the brigade which retired through the streets of that village, says in his report:

"My retreating column suffered serious loss in the streets of Winchester; males and females vied with each other in increasing the number of their victims, by firing from the house, throwing hand grenades, hot water, and missiles of every description. The hellish spirit of murder was carried on by the enemy's cavalry, who followed us in force, and who struck down with sabre and pistol the helpless soldier staggering from fatigue, unhorsing his rider for mercy, indifferent to his claims as a prisoner of war."

This record of infamy is preserved for the females of Winchester. But this is not all. Our wounded in hospital, necessarily left to the mercies of our enemies, I am credibly informed, were bayoneted by the rebel infantry, in the same town, in the same apartments, where we, when victors on the fields of Winchester, so tenderly nursed the rebel wounded, were even so more than barbarously requited.

The rebel cavalry, it would appear, give no quarter. It cannot be doubted that they butchered our stragglers, that they fight under a black flag, that they cried as they slew the wounded and jeered, "Give no quarter to the d—d Yankees!"

There is no reason whatever to question the statement of Gen. Gordon. We can only place the fact on the record of the time as a proof of the demoralizing influences, not of war, but of Slavery.

Beauregard Cut-and-Run.—Beauregard once compared himself to Alcibiades—the point of resemblance being that the Athenian had on one occasion cut off a dog's tail, and that Jeff. Davis had cut off the tail of the report of the battle of Manassas by the little Creole. At present, he rather resembles the dog than Alcibiades; for whereas, before, it was only his report that was docked, he has just had his own caudal honors grievously abbreviated by Gen. Pope, who has curtailed his army by the nice figure of 10,000 men! It seems, too, by the latest accounts that his appendage has been taken off near the point where the tail of the Dutchman's dog was—just behind the ears.

Our Recent Advices from Hayti and Liberia.—It is said that Hayti and Liberia, now that they are recognized as nations by the United States, will send white men as their representatives to Washington. Can it be that no respectable person of color is willing to lose caste by putting himself on an equality with Cox & Co. at the Capital?

Personal.

—We are happy to announce that Brig.-Gen. Louis N. Palmer, reported killed in Saturday's battle before Richmond, is probably safe. A private letter from one of his friends in Washington, states such to be the latest report, but does not say whether or not he was wounded or fell into the hands of the enemy. The last positive intelligence we have in regard to him, left him in the thickest of the fight, heroically exerting himself to rally the suffering and broken troops whom he commanded in Gen. Casey's Division. All the correspondents from the battle-field concur in flattering mention of his gallantry and self-sacrificing exposure. They also agree in the statement that he was missing when the fight was over, which suggests the fear that he was taken prisoner.

Gen. Palmer is an officer of the regular army, where he has always enjoyed a fine reputation for courage and skill. During the Mexican war he was twice brevetted for gallantry in action, and at the battle of Bull Run, his intrepidity and energy again commanded the notice of his superior officers. At that time he was in command of the Second Regular Cavalry. Subsequently he was made a Brigadier-General of Volunteers. It is due to him to say that, during all last Summer and Fall he was on duty, at Washington, as member of an Examining Board, occupying a portion of his time, meanwhile, in organizing volunteer cavalry, and sending them to the field when efficient to join other commands. The brigade led by him on Saturday consisted of infantry, among the rawest in the whole army, of whom he took charge only a few weeks ago, having left a sick bed for the purpose while yet scarcely convalescent. Of course he had not had time to make of them as reliable soldiers as long training alone, and discipline under fire has made of the army of the Potomac generally. We understand, also, that the regiments were greatly reduced by sickness, resulting from fatigue and exposure, against the effects of which older troops are proof in great degree.

—Brig.-Gen. H. M. Naglee, who has been frequently mentioned of late in connection with the advance of our army against Richmond, and who commanded a brigade in Casey's Division on Saturday, is a graduate of West Point, who resigned his Captaincy in the regular army at the close of the Mexican War, and made his home in California. Notwithstanding he had acquired a handsome property, from which he derived an income of some $10,000 per annum, when the present war broke out Capt. Naglee tendered his services to the Government, in any capacity involving active service, where he could be most useful. He was nominated to the command of one of the new regiments of Regular Infantry, declined it upon the ground that it was not likely to be raised before the hard work of the war should be over, and was then made a Brigadier-General of Volunteers and assigned to duty under Gen. McClellan. The patriotic spirit which led him to exchange so much comfort and ease for the risks and hardships of battle and the camp, gave assurance that his skilled services will prove as valuable as they are meritorious and self-sacrificing. It is a highly creditable fact that when Gen. Casey's Division fell back before the overpowering force of the enemy, its officers were every where conspicuous for their efforts to rally the men. The natural proportion of their number found in the list of killed, wounded and missing, will prove that their misfortune did not result from lack of courage in their commanders.

—Porter Kellogg, the man who, some time ago, robbed the Adams Express Company of a safe containing a large amount of money, has been pardoned by the Connecticut Legislature. His efforts to save the life of the late Warden of the Wethersfield prison from assassination by the murderer Tools, were instrumental in effecting his release from prison.

—Lieut. W. C. Gough, Quartermaster of the Third New-York Cavalry, who distinguished himself at the late skirmish near Newbern, N. C., is in this City on regimental business. Mr. Gough will return to his regiment next week, and will carry letters, &c., to the members of it.

—The health of Commodore Foote has improved quite rapidly since he arrived at Cleveland. Although he is still quite emaciated, his appetite is assuming a vigorous tone.

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON.

The Instructions of the Secretary of War to the Military Governor of North Carolina.

Telegraphic Communication with Gen. McClellan's Headquarters Interrupted.

No Vote in the Senate on the Tax Bill.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, June 4.

GOV. STANLY'S INSTRUCTIONS.

The instructions given to Hon. EDWARD STANLY, Military Governor of North Carolina, are identically those furnished to Hon. ANDREW JOHNSON. The following is a copy of the letter of instructions:

WAR DEPARTMENT, WASHINGTON, D. C., May 5, 1862.

SIR: The commission you have received, expresses all I think the nature and extent of the duties and powers conferred on you by the appointment of Military Governor of North Carolina. Instructions have been given to Maj.-Gen. BURNSIDE to aid you in the performance of your duties and the exercise of your authority. He has also been instructed to detail an adequate military force for the special purpose of a Governor's Guard, and to act under your direction. It is obvious to you that the great purpose of your appointment is to re-establish the authority of the National Government in the State of North Carolina, and to provide the means of maintaining peace and security to the loyal inhabitants of that State until they shall be able to establish a civil government. Upon your wisdom and energetic action much will depend in accomplishing that result. It seems unnecessary to give any specific instructions, but rather to confide in your sound discretion to adopt such measures as circumstances may demand. You may rely upon the perfect confidence and full support of this Department in the performance of your duties.

With respect, I am your obedient servant,

(Signed) EDWIN M. STANTON,
Secretary of War.

Hon. EDWARD STANLY, Military Governor of North Carolina.

GOV. STANLY'S commission invests him with the powers, duties and functions pertaining to the office of Military Governor, including the power to establish all necessary offices and tribunals, and suspend the writ of habeas corpus during the pleasure of the President, or until the loyal inhabitants of North Carolina shall organize a civil government in accordance with the Constitution of the United States.

NO WAR NEWS.

No dispatches have been received to-day at the War Department from the headquarters of the army of the Potomac. The military telegraph line between Fortress Monroe and headquarters has been broken down by the storm, but is expected to be repaired by to-morrow.

No intelligence of public interest has been received from the Valley of the Shenandoah. The rise in the Shenandoah embarrasses military operations.

THE ACT TO PUNISH CONTRACT FRAUDS.

The act to prevent, and punish fraud on the part of officers intrusted with making contracts with the Government, which has just been approved by the President, establishes an office in which all contracts are to be filed for public inspection. Officers making contracts are required to swear that they considered the same without any benefit or advantage to themselves, or to any other persons. The penalty for a violation of the law is not less than one hundred nor more than five hundred dollars, and imprisonment not more than six months.

THE FUNDING BILL.

An official report from the Secretary of the Treasury states the public debt on the 30th of May at $491,693,000, at an average rate of interest of four and thirty-five one hundredths.

THE NEW TARIFF BILL.

The Sub-Committee of Ways and Means have had a book of the New Tariff Bill printed for the private use of that Committee.

RELEASED NATIONAL PRISONERS.

Gen. BURNSIDE has sent to the Secretary of War a list of the 400 released United States soldiers forwarded to New-York by the steamer Virginia. This, he says, is the second detachment of prisoners released by order of Gen. HOLMES, and the third will follow on the steamer Guide in a few days. Capt. BARNES, of Gen. BURNSIDE's Staff, is now in New-York, and will personally superintend their debarkation and transportation to their homes.

SEIZURES TO THE MOHAWK.

Acting Assistant Paymaster GEORGE H. ANDREWS has been ordered to the MOHAWK.

REPRIMANDING SOLDIERS IN THE PENITENTIARY.

Attorney-General BATES having given his opinion that Courts-martial in cases within their lawful jurisdiction, may condemn persons to imprisonment at hard labor in the Penitentiary of the District of Columbia, in punishment of crimes, is too well settled to be now an open question, the Secretary of the Interior has asked him to review his opinion. He is the more inclined to this because he is constrained to believe it never was the intention of Congress that the volunteer soldiers who have so generously stood forth in the defence of their country, should for any act made criminal by the military law, be subject against their will to the ignominious punishment of imprisonment in the Penitentiary, against which the feeling of every spirited man must revolt.

OUR WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENCE.

EVENTS OF THE WEEK—THEORIES OF REBEL DESIGNS—WORK IN CONGRESS—CONFISCATION, TAXATION, AGRICULTURE, PACIFIC RAILROAD, WEST VIRGINIA, ETC.—A DEPUTATION FROM THE DELAWARE NATION—A PROVISIONAL GOVERNMENT FOR FLORIDA—A NEW KANSAS COMPLICATION—GEN. JIM LANE TO MAKE A SPEECH IN NEW-YORK.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, June 1, 1862.

Notwithstanding our chronic displeasure at the tardiness of events, they really march with a celerity which puzzles our intelligence to keep them company. A week ago, we were in a ferment over the retreat of BANKS from Virginia; yet within that week he has been reinforced by new levies, and been enabled to retrace his ground, so that last night we learn that he has again occupied Winchester and Front Royal. Within that week, political death-wounds have been self-dealt upon two of our prominent politicians—a Governor, who has proclaimed himself defective in that unquestioning loyalty which alone will satisfy the warm patriotism of the people; and a Cabinet Minister, whose feasible tremor over a diverse policy in itself, was the occasion of an official [illegible] the country for over two millions of freemen, and a general apprehension that the Capital was again in imminent danger of capture by the [illegible]

[illegible] there may be a contingency that will save the Secretary. If the result shall prove that the raid of STUART and EWELL was part of the same strategy that caused the evacuation of Corinth, his fears may have had more reason than the country now believes. We who are outside of the official arcana, are a good deal puzzled and confounded by the late movements. And there are not looking men of respectable judgment who believe to-day that Corinth was abandoned [illegible] the rebels to destroy McCLELLAN; that STUART was sent for want not only to provoke a rising in Maryland, but to draw BANKS down into his [illegible] forces were sent from Richmond to cut off the latter in case he fell into the trap; and that the troops thus sent from Richmond are being recalled by the urgency of BANKS's movement, and on equally cogent reasons which replaced that the detachment of the army of McCLELLAN will only be arrested by accident, or by the same causes that arrived Corinth and Stuart at Pea Ridge. If the rebels have the power to make these combinations in time, it must be confessed that this theory offers a more plausible explanation of the events of the last week, than the knotty reasons that have been assigned by the overready tongue of Rumor. Why else should BEAUREGARD desert his defences at Corinth? or JACKSON dare place himself in a cul de sac where each was within the Federal reach? True, BEAUREGARD may have been influenced by news from the Mississippi River; or his army may have become unmanageable; and the seeming preparations for defence at Richmond may be the usual show with which they imitate us as to intended movements; but it is argued a demoralization of the rebel cause which more serious than the public has supposed to exist.

Congress has made some progress. The passage of a Confiscation act by the House has settled the question that of the Government on that question, for the Senate is in favor of the same principle, and both Houses will most likely agree on some bill. The Senate has devoted itself rigidly to the Tax bill, managing where other questions came up during the morning hour. They had hoped to get the bill out of Committee of the Whole last evening, prolonging their session till 9 o'clock for that purpose. In this, however, they failed. It will be speedily disposed of, I judge, next week.

During the morning hour, we have had up the Agricultural College bill and the memorial of the new State of West Virginia for admission into the Union. The latter furnished an opportunity for Mr. WILSON to enlighten the Sabbath-land country on a matter which is assuming great importance as a precedent; and this he did in an able speech of about three-quarters of an hour, very clear and comprehensive, and engaging the attention of his audience. The last bill on the Agricultural College bill, too, brought out very suggestive speeches in opposition from Messrs. LANE of Kansas, and WALLACE of Indiana; and was the occasion of a sparring match between the former and Mr. CLARK. The opposition to this scheme increases with its discussion; and its recent condemnation by the House Committee, would seem to have sealed its doom for the present session. Unquestionably there are questions of immensely greater consequence now demanding the action of Congress.

Among these is the Pacific Railroad bill, which is quietly waiting till the Senate shall have disposed of the Tax bill. The bill which passed the House meets with general favor; it puts the Government to no real expense, and guarantees the construction of a road which is not only important to the industry of the country, but which, in case of a foreign war, will be absolutely indispensable to a successful defence of the Pacific States. I entertain no doubt of its passage, as soon as it can be reached without violence to measures of equal or greater importance.

The discussion of the Tax bill has been productive of some good. Never before have we been brought so squarely face to face with the great question of revenue as now. Much hard work has been done by the Senate Committee, of which Mr. FESSENDEN is Chairman, and some good speeches have been made on the floor. Mr. SUMNER and Mr. MACDOUGAL, both brought forward substitutes for the House bill, and supported them with marked ability. Mr. SUMNER has long enjoyed a reputation in practical circles, inferior to that of no man in Congress; and Mr. MACDOUGAL has surprised every one by the remarkable knowledge of finance and power of generalization which he has now displayed. I did not hear the speeches of either of these gentlemen, but common report does them great credit. Both condemn the House bill as erroneous in principle and faulty in detail; as being too clumsy for easy execution, and oppressive to the industry of the country. Both agree in preferring to single post and tax a few articles, leaving the mass of the business unburdened. In the course of his speech, Mr. MACDOUGAL made the statement that the country can sustain the present war expenditure for ten years, without material distress; and many think that he demonstrated the truth of his remarkable proposition.

There is present in Washington now, a deputation from the Delaware Nation, Kansas, (accompanied by Rev. Mr. PRATT, Missionary,) for the purpose of securing the payment of the interest on their bonds—some $500,000—stolen in the celebrated Russell-Floyd enterprise. There is no possible excuse for the neglect of the Government in this matter; and the Indians ought not to be subjected to expense or deprivation in consequence of a loss for which itself is responsible.

The subject is being agitated of a Provisional Governor for the State of Florida. It is thought that a judicious appointment will result as happily for the Union as have those of JOHNSON for Tennessee, and STANLY for North Carolina. In this connection the name of Judge DOCKER, of St. Augustine, is mentioned with great favor. He is one of the few Floridians who never hesitated between treason and loyalty—flying his home to embrace the latter—and is possessed of all the qualities which would insure a successful administration of affairs. Mr. W. B. FAIRCHILD is named as his Secretary—one of the citizens of Jacksonville, who welcomed the Union flag there when it was restored under the administration of Gen. SEWARD, and who, in consequence, was compelled to fly with his family on the unfortunate withdrawal of the National forces this Spring.

A new complication has arisen in Kansas, which seems destined long to suffer a fate of turmoil and misrule. There has been a great struggle there, ever since the admission of the State and the election of Senator LANE, between his friends and those of Gov. ROBINSON, for political ascendancy. With the people LANE has an unquestioned advantage, and his official position and extraordinary shrewdness, give him an immense superiority and influence with the Administration; but ROBINSON has large powers as Governor, and does not hesitate to strain them to their utmost limit. He has manipulated the Kansas regiments to suit his own interests, and now the War Department has undertaken to put a stop to this by direct orders to Gen. BLUNT, in command of the Department. ROBINSON denies the power of the Secretary of War in the premises, and refuses to recognize his orders, and Gen. BLUNT threatens him with arrest in consequence. As BLUNT is as determined a man as the Governor, it is not unlikely that he may execute his threat. As Gov. ROBINSON's trial on the impeachment of the House of Representatives commences to-morrow, he seems just now to have his hands filled with business.

By the way, Gen. LANE has accepted an invitation to speak at the Cooper Institute on Thursday evening next. A speech from the irrepressible orator of the prairies will be a fit companion-piece for that of the Tennessee Parson, which so lately woke those echoes.

The street-boys are telling us that Richmond is being evacuated. I have no means of verifying the report, and venture to insinuate a doubt; but all our data for judgment are so badly used up, that even guessing has become hazardous. J. M. W.

THE PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS.

SENATE.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, June 4.

A communication was received from the Secretary of the Interior, in answer to a resolution calling for information relating to soldiers imprisoned in the Penitentiary.

A communication was received from the Secretary of War, transmitting instructions given to the Governors of Tennessee and North Carolina.

Mr. HALE, of New-Hampshire, (Rep.,) offered a resolution that a Committee of Three be appointed to consider some means for ventilating the Senate Chamber. Laid over.

Mr. WILSON, of Massachusetts, (Rep.,) introduced a joint resolution, allowing hereafter a premium of $2 for every accepted recruit to the regular army, and allowing soldiers enlisting as volunteers or in the regular army to receive their first month's pay in advance. Passed.

A joint resolution, suspending all payments under the act making payments to persons employed in the Department of the West, was taken up and passed.

The Tax bill was then taken up.

The question being on concurring in the amendment striking out the tax on cotton,

Mr. WILSON, of Massachusetts, earnestly opposed any tax on cotton, as unjust and ruinous to the great manufacturing interests of the country. The burden would chiefly fall on the industrial interests of New-England, which under the proposed bill already bear a burden, paying at least four dollars to one, as compared with the great agricultural districts of the West. Many of the cotton-mills were closed already, and a heavy tax on cotton would tend to close them all, and throw the operatives out of employment.

Mr. CHANDLER, of Michigan, (Rep.,) contended that it was fit and proper that a tax should be put on cotton. That was the great source of the rebellion, and had been obtained at kine, and now that we have got his majesty down, we should keep our foot on him. He claimed that the people of the West, especially of Michigan, paid a full proportion tax, and would pay cheerfully. This tax on cotton would also be a burden on France and England, who had been intimidated to the United States in the present contest.

The discussion was continued at length by Messrs. SHERMAN, CLARK, SUMNER, HARRIS, HOWE, and others.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio, (Rep.,) wished to reconsider the vote rejecting Mr. ANTHONY's amendment yesterday, to lay a tax of one-half cent per pound on cotton.

Reconsidered—Yeas, 24; Nays, 18.

The question then recurred on the amendment making a tax on cotton of ½ cent per pound, which was adopted—Yeas 26; Nays 16.

Mr. SUMNER, of Massachusetts, (Rep.,) moved to reduce the tax on the receipts of insurance companies from three to one per cent.

Mr. DIXON, of Connecticut, (Rep.,) spoke at some length in favor of the reduction.

After a long discussion, the amendment was rejected—Yeas 16, Nays 20.

Mr. FESSENDEN, of Maine, (Rep.,) offered an amendment to make the tax on Marine Insurance Companies one half of one per cent on the receipts. Rejected.

Mr. COLLAMER, of Vermont, (Rep.,) offered an amendment excepting Mutual Insurance Companies. Adopted.

Mr. FOSTER, of Connecticut, (Rep.,) moved to reconsider the vote rejecting the amendment to reduce the tax on Insurance Companies to one per cent.

The vote was reconsidered, yeas, 29; nays, 16; and the amendment reducing the tax to one per cent was adopted.

Mr. DAVIS, of Kentucky, (Union,) moved to insert an amendment to tax gold and silver plate, net over $50 in value, three per cent, and billiard tables $50 each.

Rejected. Yeas, 18; Nays, 26.

At 7½ o'clock the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, June 4.

The Speaker announced the business before the House to be the motion of Mr. FOSTER to reconsider the vote by which was rejected the bill to free from servitude the slaves of those in rebellion against the United States.

Mr. FOSTER, of Indiana, (Rep.,) said that the bill was too sweeping and indiscriminate. It affected all persons however remotely or indirectly implicated in the rebellion. In his judgment it imposed severe and excessive chastisement upon many who were driven into rebellion by monstrous misapprehension, misrepresentation and delusion, and who, if the overwhelming pressure upon them were removed, would promptly assert their loyalty to the Government. The provisions rendered insecure the title of property owned by loyal men in the rebellious States; men who have been faithful to the Constitution and Union amid every form of insult and humiliation. He would not encroach on the property of the thousands of brave men in the Border Slave States who are vindicating our flag. But a bill ought to pass to punish the conspirators who originated the rebellion, and their not less guilty accomplices. His object in moving a reconsideration, was to have the bill recommitted to the Special Committee on Confiscation, with instructions to report a substitute, declaring free the slaves of those who shall hereafter hold offices of profit or honor in any of the rebellious States, or under the so-called Confederate Government. Also, providing for the acquisition of lands on which to colonize such freedmen with their own consent, and denationalizing the above-mentioned class of rebels. He contended that such an act would cripple them as a political and governing power, without intrenching on the rights of loyal men.

Mr. PERRY, of Missouri, (Union,)—In explanation—he declared to do what he could to suppress the rebellion and restore the Union. I believe the African race were in better condition under subordination than free. If slaves are declared or become free in Missouri, they would be expelled from the State; but they cannot emigrate to the State which the gentleman in part represents.

Mr. FOSTER replied that Indiana preferred white men while Missouri has chosen negroes, to develop her agricultural interests; but this was no reason why the rebels should not be dispossessed of their slave property.

Mr. VALLANDIGHAM, of Ohio, (Dem.,) moved to table Mr. FOSTER's motion to reconsider. Negatived—63 against 68.

The vote by which the Slave Confiscation bill heretofore rejected was reconsidered—84 against 64.

Mr. FOSTER then offered a substitute for the bill, and moved to put it on its passage.

Mr. KELLOGG, of Ohio, (Rep.,) objected to this. It was a great improvement on the original bill, but he was not prepared to vote for any such measure without examination, and he simply voted to reconsider for that purpose. The reconsideration showed that the conservative men are a power in the House as well as in the country.

Mr. FOSTER now moved to recommit the bill to the Select Committee, with instructions to report his substitute, as indicated in the previous part of these proceedings.

The motion was agreed to, 84 against 63.

Mr. FOSTER's substitute, and an amendment offered by Mr. DIXON, were ordered to be printed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, (Rep.,) reported from the Committee on Judiciary a bill declaring persons holding offices under the so-called Confederate States forever ineligible to office under the United States. After a brief debate, the bill was passed by 81 majority.

Mr. COLFAX, of Indiana, (Rep.,) inquired of Mr. BINGHAM what action the Judiciary Committee had taken on his bill punishing fraudulent contractors with fine and imprisonment, referred to them by the House some weeks ago.

Mr. BINGHAM, of Ohio, (Rep.,) replied the Committee had referred it to Judge THOMAS, of Massachusetts, one of their members, and they expected to be able to report on it next week.

Adjourned.

LOCAL MILITARY NEWS.

ARRIVAL OF THE TWENTY-FIFTH (ALBANY) REGIMENT.

Yesterday morning, at 11 o'clock, the Twenty-fifth Regiment, from Albany, arrived in this City, on its way to Washington. Landing at the foot of Canal-street, it was marched to the Arsenal, corner of White and Elm streets, where a substantial dinner was provided the men. It was expected that the regiment would have left during the evening; in consequence, however, of the inclemency of the weather, the departure was delayed till to-day. All of the men are armed with the Enfield rifle. Companies D and E declined leaving with the regiment, giving for a reason that they were composed exclusively of Germans, while the majority of the members of the regiment were Irish. Notwithstanding this Col. BRIAN has very nearly recruited his full complement of men. Subjoined is a list of the officers:

Staff.—Colonel, M. K. Bryan; Lieutenant Colonel, James Swift; Major, David Friedlander; Adjutant, John M. Kimball; Quartermaster, Michael McDonald; Surgeon, Dr. E. B. O'Leary; Assistant Surgeon, Dr. Thomas Beckett; Chaplain, Rev. E. P. Wadhams; Quartermaster Sergeant, Michael Carroll; Hospital Steward, N. Seeley.

Line.—Company A—Jacob Friedenthal, Captain; John Pinchin, First Lieutenant; John Nibbok, Second Lieutenant. Company B—Timothy McDermott, Captain; [illegible], First Lieutenant; Terrence Quinn, Second Lieutenant. Company C—[illegible], Captain; [illegible], First Lieutenant; Michael Ryan, Second Lieutenant. Company D—Michael Kenally, Captain; Patrick Fahey, First Lieutenant; Patrick [illegible], Second Lieutenant. Company E—James Carlin, First Lieutenant; [illegible], Second Lieutenant. Company F—John Wickham, Second Lieutenant. Company H—Hale Kingsley, Captain; Abraham Sickles, First Lieutenant; M. A. Nolan and John Lawless, Jr., Second Lieutenants.

THE TWELFTH REGIMENT NOT YET OFF.

At 10 o'clock yesterday morning the Twelfth Regiment was inspected by its commandant, Col. WEED, at the new State Arsenal, corner of Thirty-fifth-street and Seventh-avenue. The men were in excellent condition, and the Colonel expressed himself highly satisfied with their appearance. Owing to some necessary delay the regiment did not leave as was expected. To-day a grand parade will take place, in order to afford Col. WEED an opportunity of seeing the proficiency his command has attained in drill. To-morrow, there is little doubt, the Twelfth will leave for Washington.

THE FIFTH REGIMENT.

Col. LOUIS BURGER has been most active in recruiting for this regiment, and has nearly raised it to its full standard. None of the men have, as yet, been mustered into the service of the United States, neither has any definite time been arranged for so doing; but it is supposed that in a few days the men will be sworn soldiers of the Government, and receive marching orders from their Colonel.

The Supreme Court of Wisconsin.

MADISON, Wis., Wednesday, June 4.

The Supreme Court of this State has reversed its former decision on the tax on lands, in which they declared the taxes levied in 1858 and 1859 illegal, on account of the exemption of railroads.

FROM FORTRESS MONROE.

Gen. Weed Resigns the Post to Gen. Dix.

AN ORDER BY GEN. McCLELLAN.

Arrival of the Wounded in the Great Battle.

FORTRESS MONROE, Tuesday, June 3, }
Via BALTIMORE, Wednesday, June 4. }

Neither the steamers Metamora or Wachusett have yet arrived from up the James River. They are hourly expected.

The steamer State of Maine arrived to-day from White House, with about 500 wounded in the recent engagement. These are among the worst cases, which it was thought would not be able to carry such distances as to New-York or Philadelphia.

Gen. DIX assumed command here yesterday, and immediately issued the following:

HEADQUARTERS, FORT MONROE, Va., June 3, 1862.

GENERAL ORDER No. 1.—Pursuant to orders from the War Department, the undersigned assumes command at this point. All orders now in force will be obeyed until otherwise directed. (Signed)

JOHN A. DIX, Major-General.

Gen. WEED issued the following order taking leave of his command:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF VIRGINIA, }
FORT MONROE, Va., June 3, 1862. }

GENERAL ORDER No. 53.—The Department of Virginia having been assigned to Major-Gen. GEORGE B. McCLELLAN, and Fort Monroe to Major-Gen. JOHN A. DIX, and the latter having arrived to assume command, Major-Gen. JOHN E. WOOL this day takes leave of the Department, which he has commanded more than nine months with pleasure and entire satisfaction. The discipline and good order of the troops render it due to them to say that he has ever, when required, found them prompt, zealous, active and energetic. In parting with such a command, he would do injustice to his feelings were he not to say that he does it with extreme regret. He, however, derives consolation from the fact that they are hereafter to be commanded by a General who can appreciate their discipline, good order, and efficiency.

By command of Major-Gen. WOOL.

S. CARNCROSS, A. A. G.

Gen. DIX having reported to Gen. McCLELLAN for orders, received the following by telegraph last night, which indicates exactly the position of affairs:

Major-Gen. JOHN A. DIX, United States Volunteers, having reported at these headquarters, in pursuance of orders from the War Department, Adjutant-General's office, of the 1st instant, will assume command of troops at Fortress Monroe, Norfolk, Portsmouth and Suffolk, and in the vicinity of those places, exercising within his command the functions of Commander of Division of separate corps. By command of Maj.-Gen. McCLELLAN.

(Signed) S. WILLIAMS, A. A. G.

Gen. WOOL and Staff, it is understood, will proceed to Baltimore by special boat to-morrow night.

Sixty-nine prisoners arrived this afternoon from White House, captured on Saturday.

ANOTHER PRIZE.

A Cotton Schooner Captured Off Charleston.

The prize schooner Lucy C. Holmes, of Charleston, S. C., in charge of Prize-master DAWTON COGGESHALL, arrived at this port yesterday. She was captured by the United States steamer Santiago de Cuba, May 27, sixty miles E. S. E. from the Santee River, having come out of Charleston the night previous, bound to Nassau, N. P. Her cargo consists of 170 bales cotton.

This is the fourth prize taken by this steamship within four weeks. Prize-master COGGESHALL passed very near a Confederate steamer while going by the Santee River. Had the steamer known the schooner she would no doubt have been retaken, as they both belong to the same owners in Charleston.

The Lucy C. Holmes is bound to Boston.

The Missouri State Convention.

JEFFERSON CITY, Tuesday, June 3.

In the Convention but little was done, except offering and referring to the proper Committees, resolutions relating to the various subjects before the Convention.

The Committee on Elections, this afternoon, determined to report in favor of repealing the ordinance passed at the previous session, submitting the action of the Convention to the people for ratification or rejection, and against holding an election for State officers until the term for which CLAIR, JACKSON was elected expires (in 1864). They have not yet determined in regard to the election for members of the Legislature.

The Case of Maj. Williams.

PHILADELPHIA, Wednesday, June 4.

Upon application to Gen. McCLELLAN for information respecting the arrest of Maj. LAWRENCE A. WILLIAMS, Sixth Cavalry, U. S. A., made by his sister, in this city, Gen. McCLELLAN has made a reply, entirely exculpating that officer from the serious charge of treason made against him, and stating that he is now commanding his regiment at the head of the advance guard, displaying daily a degree of skill extremely gratifying.

"THE GRIM CHIEFTAIN."—Hon. Gen. LANE, of Kansas, is to speak in the Cooper Institute this evening. Those who have never listened to this greatest of Western orators will now have an opportunity to hear him never before offered in this City. His topic will of course be the present rebellion—against which LANE has fought and spoken during the past year and a half, with a vigor equaled by few other Western men. His popularity in the West is unbounded; and as a soldier in the war of freedom in Kansas, and again last Summer in Missouri, he did service known only to those who know the country and the people amid whom he served. For daring, eloquence and force "JIM LANE" is everywhere known, and we hope the great hall of the Cooper Institute will be crowded to-night.

SUMMER RESORT—ROUND HILL HOTEL, NORTHAMPTON, MASS.—Terms, $1 50 per day, or $7 to $10 per week.

The Value of Vaccination.—A letter from Geneva, written to the New-York Health Commissioner.

GENTLEMEN:—Having seen by the newspapers, that the subject of compulsory vaccination is being agitated before your honorable board, I beg leave to bring to your notice a most interesting and striking proof of the efficacy of vaccination, as a preventive of small pox, which has recently come under my own observation as Medical Officer of this ship:

The day after we sailed from New-York, one of the seamen, who had never been vaccinated, was taken ill with the premonitory symptoms of small pox, which in due time cleared into a full-blown case, of the confluent character, and proved fatal at the end of four days. On the first appearance of the disease I vaccinated all hands (as I then supposed), and awaited the issue with much anxiety. After the critical time had passed, I found but one victim of the vaccination by my hands, and, upon investigation, discovered the patient had never before been vaccinated, and when answered with his signature to receive the beneficial prick of my lancet, had skulked away from prejudice against the operation; and thus demonstrated the protection to which they owed their safety. This man now lives to exhibit the marks of his folly on a deeply scarred face, the result of a black varioloid attack of small pox.

Such is a marked instance of its protecting power, against full to make friends for the cause of compulsory vaccination, and to aid in doing away with the false prejudice against its being put in force.

I may have add that, amongst those protected by vaccination, there were some faint attempts at varioloid, but unattended by any more serious symptoms than a slight febrile action, pains in the loins, and a pustule or two on the face, as was the case in the person of the writer.

Respectfully yours, &c.,
W. ARGYLE WATSON, M. D.

UNITED STATES STEAMER CUYLER,
Tuesday, May 20, 1862.

—A deplorable tragedy occurred in Springfield, Mo., on May 21. Capt. John R. Clark, of Company F, Fifth Kansas Cavalry, being officer of the day, called, in company with one A. J. Rice, both in a state of intoxication, at the house of Mrs. Willis, a widow lady, to get their supper. Mrs. Willis refused to prepare it for them. This enraged the Captain and his companion, and they drew their pistols and attempted to force their way into the house through the guard who had been stationed to protect it. One of the guard shot the Captain through the body, killing him instantly. About the same time, Rice fired at the guard, killing him, but sending a ball through the head of Miss Mary Willis. She fell dead on the floor. Another of the guard fired at Rice, shooting him in the breast, and inflicting what was thought to be a mortal wound. Mrs. Willis is a Union refugee from Arkansas, where she lost two sons assassinated by rebel guerrillas. Capt. Clark was a native of Toledo, Ohio, but settled in Grundy County, in the State, 1856. He served in the Mexican war under Sterling Price, and was afterward twice elected Sheriff of Grundy County.

No. 2 Wall-st., New-York.

Subscriptions received for the Loan of the City of New-York.

BROWN BROTHERS & CO.,
NO. 59 WALL-ST.,
ISSUE CIRCULAR LETTERS OF CREDIT FOR USE IN THIS COUNTRY AND ABROAD.

A LOAN FOR EIGHT HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS is offered by the Comptroller of the State of New-York, on the security of the Sinking Fund, to pay a portion of the State Debt.

The Comptroller, by virtue of the act, chapter 316, laws of 1862, has set apart the sum of $800,000 out of the Sinking Fund, for which transferable certificates will be issued, in the name of the People of the State of New-York, under Article 1 of the Constitution, bearing interest at the rate of six per cent per annum, payable in each year, and the principal on the first day of July, 1876. It is to be understood that the Comptroller will be at liberty to take a portion or the whole or any part of said Loan not exceeding $800,000 at any time before the 1st of July, 1862, all or partially to be sealed and certified by the Comptroller, on account of the Government, to the Sinking Fund, and instead in an equal amount to the Comptroller of the State of New-York.

The money will be required to be paid on the 20th day of June next, by depositing the same in gold, or its equivalent, to the credit of the Treasurer of the State of New-York, in the Bank of the Manhattan Company, New-York.

The application of Stocks issued to the New-York and Erie Railroad Company, amounting to $600,000, recently taken up, will also be received in payment of bids.

Interest on the Loan will commence on the first day of July next, and it will be paid to the holders of the Stock upon the office of the Sinking Fund Company, New-York, Broad Comptroller's Office, June 3, 1862.

LUCIUS ROBINSON, Comptroller.

PROPOSALS FOR $333,000 "CENTRAL PARK IMPROVEMENT FUND STOCK, OF 1862."

Sealed proposals will be received by the Comptroller's Office, until FRIDAY, the 27th day of June, 1862, at the office of the Chamberlain of the City, in the City of New-York, when the same will be publicly opened for the purchase of any part of the sum of THREE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-THREE THOUSAND DOLLARS of the "CENTRAL PARK IMPROVEMENT FUND STOCK," of the City of New-York, by the Common Council, approved by the Mayor, April 28, 1862.

The Stock will bear interest at the rate of six per cent per annum, payable quarter yearly, and the principal will be redeemable on the 1st day of July, 1876.

The proposals will state the amount of stock desired, the price per cent, and the date thereof, and the person or persons making the same respectively, will be required to deposit with the Chamberlain of the City, within fifteen days after the opening of the bids, the sums awarded to them respectively.

Proposals to be addressed to the Comptroller, the receipts of the Chamberlain for such deposits, the parties will be entitled to receive the stock for equal amounts of the par value of the stock, bearing interest from the dates of payments.

Each proposal should be sealed and indorsed "Proposals for Central Park Improvement Fund Stock," and inclosed in an outer envelope addressed to the Comptroller.

The right is reserved to reject any or all of the bids, if considered necessary to protect or promote the interests of the City.

ROBT. T. HAWS, Comptroller.

PROPOSALS.

FRESH, FRUIT AND VEGETABLES FOR THE NAVY.

Navy Bureau of Provisions and Clothing, Washington, March 1, 1862.

SEALED PROPOSALS WILL BE RECEIVED at this office until THURSDAY, the fifth day of June, 1862, at 12 o'clock, for the supply of such quantities of Fresh Fruit and Vegetables as may be required on the New-York station, during the fiscal year commencing on the 1st day of July next, including the month of June, 1863.

The Fruit and Vegetables must be of good quality, and the best the market affords; and each article must be offered for by the pound.

Bids with approved security will be required to an amount equal to the estimated amount of the contract, and twenty per centum in addition will be withheld from the amount of each quarterly bill so made, as additional security for the due performance of the contract, which will on no account be paid until it is fully complied with. Payment to be made in certificates of indebtedness or in Treasury notes, at the option of the Government.

Every offer made must be accompanied (as directed in the act of Congress making appropriation for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1862,) by a written guaranty, signed by one of the responsible parties, to the effect that he or they undertake that the bidder or bidders will, if his or their bid be accepted, enter into an obligation within five days, with good and sufficient sureties, to furnish the articles proposed.

No proposal will be considered unless accompanied by such guaranty.

PROPOSALS FOR PAINTING DOME OF CAPITOL.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, WASHINGTON, D. C., May 29, 1862.

Sealed proposals will be received at this Department until TUESDAY, the 10th day of June, at 12 M., for furnishing materials and executing the painting of the Iron-work of the new dome of the United States Capitol.

Drawings exhibiting every part of the work, and specifications explaining the manner of executing the same, may be examined at the Architect's Office, in the south wing on the attic story of the capitol, between the hours of 9 A. M. and 4 P. M.

WATT J. SMITH, Chief Clerk.

SEALED PROPOSALS WILL BE RECEIVED up to 12 M., on MONDAY, June 9, 1862, at the office of the Assistant Quartermaster, United States Army, for furnishing to the undersigned, with a view of purchasing,

1,000 SADDLE-HORSES.

To be free from all defects; to be between six (6) and nine (9) years old, and from 15 to 15½ hands high.

MARES EXCLUDED.

All animals submitted will be subjected to a thorough examination and inspection, by a duly authorized agent of the Government appointed for that purpose.

Persons to whom the bids are awarded will be notified where the inspection of the animals will take place, at the time of awarding the contracts.

The Government reserves the right to reject all bids deemed unreasonable.

Proposals will be received for the whole, or any part of the above number of horses, and they will be accompanied by the names of two (2) responsible parties, who shall become security for the faithful execution of the contract.

Delivery to commence within six days after the signing of the contract.

Proposals will be indorsed, "Proposals for Supplying the Government with Horses," and will be directed to Capt. HENRY C. HODGES, Assistant Quartermaster U. S. Army, No. 19 Mercer-street, New-York.

DEPUTY QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE, PHILADELPHIA, May 30, 1862.

PROPOSALS WILL BE RECEIVED AT this office on TUESDAY, 27th day of May, TUESDAY, June 3, and TUESDAY, June 10, at 12 o'clock M. for the delivery of (1,000) one thousand cavalry horses in this city, for the Army of the Potomac. Delivery to commence immediately after the contracts are awarded, on the above dates, and the whole number contracted for to be delivered in fifteen days from time of awarding such contracts. The horses must be sound and free from blemish, not less than (15) fifteen hands high, and not less than (4) four years old, not more than nine, and well trained. No mares will be taken. No bids will be received from any one person for more than (100) one hundred horses, and no bids will be entertained unless the bidder or his agent is present at opening the proposals, and who will immediately give security for the faithful performance of the contract, if required. Proposals will be opened and all horses unfit for cavalry service will be rejected. Proposals accompanied by the names of proposed sureties, who will be required to give a bond for the faithful execution of the contract, to be marked, "Proposals for Cavalry Horses," addressed to (Signed) A. BOYD, Capt. and A. Q. M.

SEALED PROPOSALS WILL BE RECEIVED by the School Officers of the XVIIIth Ward, at the office of the Clerk of the Board of Education, corner of Grand and Elm sts., until WEDNESDAY, the 18th day of June, 1862, at 12 o'clock, noon, for the erection of a wing on the easterly side of, and adjoining, Ward School-House No. 54, in said Ward, pursuant to plans and specifications on file, and to be seen at the office of the Superintendent of School Buildings, No. 96 Crosby-st. Two responsible and approved sureties will be required from the successful bidders, and no proposals will be considered in which no sureties are named. The School Officers of the Ward reserve the right to reject any or all of the proposals offered, if deemed for the public interest so to do.

Dated June 4, 1862.

FREDERICK E. MATHER, MICHAEL RYAN, EDWARD COOPER, JOHN FOSTER, } Committee on New Schools of the XVIIIth Ward.

SEALED PROPOSALS WILL BE RECEIVED by the School Officers of the Tenth Ward, at the office of the Clerk of the Board of Education, corner of Grand and Elm sts., until MONDAY, the 16th day of June, at 12 o'clock, noon, for painting the exterior and the interior walls and woodwork of Ward School-house No. 20, in said Ward, pursuant to specifications on file, and to be seen at the office of the Superintendent of School Buildings, No. 96 Crosby-st. Two responsible and approved sureties will be required from the successful bidder, and no proposals will be considered in which no sureties are named. The School Officers of the Ward reserve the right to reject any or all of the proposals offered, if deemed for the public interest so to do.

JOHN HAYWARD, CHAS. E. KUGLER, J. FRANCIS BARNES, JOHN H. NIEFOTH, } Tenth Ward Board of School Officers.

Dated June 2, 1862.

DEPUTY QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE, PHILADELPHIA, May 30, 1862.

MEDICAL.

THERIACAL, THE GREAT ENGLISH REMEDY.

THERIACAL Balm, the great remedy, and only certain cure for Gonorrhœa, Gleet, Stricture, Seminal Weakness, Impotency, Nervous Debility, and all diseases of the Urinary Organs, whether in Male or Female, from whatever cause originating, and however long or severe the case may be, is now recommended to the afflicted as the most perfect, safe, and reliable medicine in the world. All pain, inconvenience, and exposure are avoided, and a cure is effected in a few days, without the nauseous drugging and injury to the stomach and digestive organs so long and so generally practised by the medical profession. Thousands who have long been victims to the quackery of the day, and have spent their money and time in vain, are now rapidly and permanently cured by the use of this wonderful remedy. Diseases of a delicate nature, which if neglected or improperly treated produce premature decrepitude, confirmed impotence, or even a lingering death, are speedily and effectually cured by this Balm. Recent cases of Gonorrhœa or Gleet cured in one day, without the slightest danger or exposure. Strictures of long standing, the result of improper treatment of secondary diseases, or the injudicious use of mercury, involuntary emissions, spermatorrhœa, and all diseases of the urinary organs, whether in male or female, from whatever cause originating, and however long or severe the case may be, are speedily and effectually cured by this Balm. Persons at a distance, failing to receive prompt treatment, may rely upon a permanent cure being effected by a full disclosure of the disease, addressed to Dr. WARD & CO., No. 12 Laight-st., the only place.

SURE CURE.—DR. POWERS, SUCCESSFULLY consulted, with Dr. Wade, Mansfield, Ohio. He gives advice free, and guarantees a permanent cure or no pay. Glorious testimonial of medicine. Dr. POWERS' sure specific remedies for syphilitic, mercurial and all other foul side diseases; for certainty unapproached, and for absolute eradication of disease, nothing besides can positively be relied upon; they alone are to be convinced. Dr. POWERS' Balm of Life restores the vigor of youth in four weeks. This marvelous agent restores manhood to the most shattered constitutions. Success in every instance is as certain as that water quenches thirst. Office No. 12 Laight-st., the only place. Prevents better than cures. Dr. POWERS' French Preventive or Patent Vulcanized Safe. Those who have used them are never without them. Price $4 per dozen; mailed free on receipt of remittance.

DR. JOHNSON, NO. 14 DUANE-ST., MAY be consulted with confidence on private diseases. Thirty years in one specialty enables him to guarantee speedy and permanent cures. N. B.—Those who may have been misled by quack advertisements, nostrums, &c., can rely on Dr. J. with the certainty of receiving honorable treatment.

DR. HUNTER'S RED DROP RESTORES the vigor of youth in four days. Restores manhood to the lost or exhausted. Dr. Hunter's French Preventive, $4 per dozen. No. 3 Division-st., New-York; the only place. You who have contracted that soul and body-destroying vice, Secret Habits, Dr. HUNTER'S Red Drop cures the worst cases. Price $1, with a book.

NOTICE.—DR. C. D. HAMMOND (AUTHOR OF "NERVOUS DEBILITY," &c.) has returned from Europe, and may be consulted as heretofore, at No. 31 East 27th-st., fifth house from Madison-av., from 8 to 10, 1 to 3, and 6 to 9 evening.

DYSPEPSIA AND KINDRED DISEASES of the stomach and bowels can be more effectually cured by a vegetable nutritious cracker (Davy's Ervalenta) than by any drugs. ISAAC McGAY, Cracker Baker, No. 315 Forsyth-st., N. Y.

SOMETHING FOR EVERY LADY.—DR. WARD'S Great Benefactor. The great periodical remedy, infallible for the immediate removal of monthly obstructions. Office, No. 12 Laight-st., near Canal, where Dr. WARD can be consulted confidentially, day or evening.

PRIVATE CONSULTATION.—DR. HUNTER has, for thirty years, confined his attention to diseases of a certain class, in which he has treated no less than fifty thousand cases, without an instance of failure. His great remedy, HUNTER'S RED DROP, cures certain diseases when regular treatment and all other remedies fail; cures without dieting or restriction in the habits of the patient; cures without the disgusting and sickening effects of all other remedies; cures in new cases in less than six hours; cures without the dreadful consequent effects of mercury, but possesses the peculiarly valuable property of annihilating the rank and poisonous taint that the blood is sure to absorb, unless his remedy is used. The great Dr. Hunter, who is now in this city, has accomplished his value in this respect, has become so well known, that scientific men in every department of medical knowledge begin to appreciate it, for hardly a week passes that he is not consulted by druggists, chemists and physicians, in regard to some distinguished patient, who has exhausted the whole field of the faculty, and still the disease will appear. He generally is so great that there is not a moment to lose. If Dr. Hunter's Red Drop fails, even when they find their lives are not so easily unalloyed, they then protested that they can make it. It is 21 to 1 vial, and cannot be obtained genuine anywhere but at the old office, No. 3 Division-st. Book for 4c. three-cent stamps, 200 pages, 100 colored illustrations. The best work out.

upon the grounds not over a mile distant from the opposite bank of the river.

Prisoners captured at Hanover continue to be brought in. It is officially reported that the whole number taken is over 700. Among the prisoners taken are one brigade and two regimental surgeons, who are now engaged in dressing the wounds of their own people. A large barn belonging to the child Rosecrans, Dr. GAINES, has been converted into a hospital, and contains at present about 40 wounded prisoners.

Many of them consider it a fortunate circumstance that they fell into our hands, because we have surgeons who know how to treat their wounds, and are willing to extend to them all the comforts and privileges that reason and humanity could require. One prisoner asked why we did not come sooner, declaring that he had been the victim to secure a chance to escape from the rebel army; and numbers of my acquaintance, he added, who have been forced into this war, are daily waiting an opportunity to throw down their weapons and escape to your lines.

Affairs here, yesterday, a most terrible thunder-storm visited us, drenching the camp and the distinguished gentlemen of the army in a manner that has seldom been witnessed by Northern troops. The rain continued until late last night. During the afternoon, when the shower had reached its acme, Quartermaster's Sergeant C. H. Hersom, of the Forty-fourth New-York Regiment, was killed by lightning. Sergeant-Major J. Wiman and Sergeant Gannon, also of the Forty-fourth, were struck at the same time, but their injuries are not reported as dangerous.

A Terrible Storm—Killed and Injured by Lightning—Fort Lafayette that Beauregard will Move his Forces to Virginia—State of Affairs in Richmond.

NEW-BEDFORD, Sunday, June 1—5 P. M.

Yesterday afternoon we were visited by a terrible storm, doing considerable damage to our camps, and, I regret to say, causing a loss of life.

The gallant Forty-fourth Regiment, just returned from the battle of Hanover Court-house, had one man killed and four badly injured in their camp by lightning. Their names are as follows: Killed, Quartermaster-Sergeant Henry Howlett; injured, Sergeant-Major Webber, Sergeant Godfrey, Sergeant Willard, private Jacob Dobbs.

Trees were blown down injuring many of our soldiers by their falls, and tents were prostrated. In several of the camps there have been lives lost. Two houses and a barn were struck by lightning in the vicinity of New-Bridge. The tornado lasted about three hours, and was accompanied by heavy peals of thunder and rain. The roads are again in a frightful condition. Any movement, therefore, for the present, is almost impossible.

News of the evacuation of Corinth by BEAUREGARD, and occupation of Harper's Ferry by JACKSON's forces was received yesterday at headquarters. If BEAUREGARD has his Memphis communication still open, his army will come to Richmond instead of going to New-Orleans.

The policy of concentration is being rapidly followed by the rebels from the different points of their line. There is not a moment to be lost in capturing Richmond before BEAUREGARD can form a junction with Jos. JOHNSTON. I have no doubt but for the heavy fall of rain yesterday, the army would have been marching to Richmond to-day.

A contraband who left Richmond last night, reports the houses in some portions of the city barred, ready to be set on fire, which, he says, they intend doing rather than surrender. Valuable personal property of all descriptions has been removed.

Provisions on the line of the rebel army in front of Richmond, are very scarce. The troops are living on half rations. The city is vacated by every family that can get away. Few stores are open, business is completely stagnated.

Col. McQUADE, now commanding Second Brigade in Fitz John PORTER's Division, will be recommended to the President for appointment as Brigadier-General, for gallantry, &c., at the battle of Hanover Court-house.

Dr. WARREN, Medical Director of Gen. PORTER's Division, deserves the highest commendation for his perfect arrangements in the care of the wounded. All, with few exceptions, under his skillful treatment, are doing well. M.

BRIG.-GEN. HOWARD WOUNDED.

BALTIMORE, Wednesday, June 4.

The Old Point boat arrived at 5½ o'clock this morning. Among her passengers were Brig.-Gen. HOWARD and son, Lieut. HOWARD, wounded in the late battle. The former had his arm amputated before leaving. They have both gone North.

FROM THE CORINTH ARMY.

Important Dispatch from Gen. Halleck.

Gen. Pope Thirty Miles South of Corinth With 40,000 Men.

THE RETREATING REBELS HARD PUSHED

Ten Thousand Prisoners and Deserters Already Captured.

Fifteen Thousand Stand of Arms Secured.

Beauregard in a Condition of Frenzy.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, June 4.

The following dispatch was received this afternoon at the War Department:

HALLECK'S HEADQUARTERS, June 4.

Hon. E. M. Stanton, Secretary of War:

Gen. POPE, with 40,000 men, is thirty miles south of Corinth, pushing the enemy hard. He already reports 10,000 prisoners and deserters from the enemy, and 15,000 stand of arms captured. Thousands of the enemy are throwing away their arms.

A farmer says that when BEAUREGARD learned that Col. ELLIOTT had cut the railroad on his line of retreat, he became frantic, and told his men to save themselves the best way they could.

We have captured nine locomotives and a number of cars. One of the former is already repaired, and is running to-day. Several more will be in running order in two or three days.

The result is all I could possibly desire.

(Signed,) H. W. HALLECK,
Major-General Commanding.

GEN. POPE'S MOVEMENTS.

CHICAGO, Wednesday, June 4.

A special dispatch from Cairo, says:

Immediately on the occupation of Corinth, forces from Gen. POPE's Division were sent out in pursuit of such rebels as fled westward.

Gen. GRANGER, in command of two regiments of cavalry, soon came in the rear of the enemy six miles southwest of Corinth and engaged in a fight. He lost fifty men, but was afterwards largely reinforced, when the rebels were surrounded. It is said that five or ten thousand have been captured. A portion of them have reached Pittsburgh Landing, en route to northern military prisons.

At last accounts Gen. POPE was nine miles southwest of Corinth, which point his whole corps had reached.

THE EVACUATION OF CORINTH.

Correspondence of the Chicago Times.

CAIRO, Sunday, June 1, 1862.

The City Belle arrived from Pittsburgh Landing at about midnight last night. Parties who come direct from Corinth assert the idea that we have secured any number of prisoners. None were seen in or about the enemy's works when they left, except an occasional straggler. There seems to be no doubt that Gen. HALLECK was taken by surprise by the complete evacuation of the enemy's position. He had counted on a desperate resistance by them to the last. His line of battle was formed on Friday morning, and arrangements were complete for an obstinate fight. His advanced batteries were at work shelling the town with the utmost vigor, even up to the time that portions of our force were in occupation. There is no doubt that had the enemy remained they would have been annihilated or forced to surrender. On Friday the decisive blow Gen. HALLECK had aimed was falling, while the rebels were effecting their masterly dodge. The inception of this blow is seen in the operations of Wednesday, when our entire line was advanced from one-half to three-quarters of a mile, and up into easy range of the enemy's works.

Our heavy siege guns were put into position on the works thrown up by the advanced column on that day. This movement throughout was hotly contested, the enemy doubtless seeking to keep our forces at a safe distance, if possible, until their escape should be consummated. They continued to show an unbroken front, and to work their batteries with energy, and without interruption, throughout that and the following days. It seems quite plain that their advance pickets were kept in total ignorance of the retrograde movements taking place in their rear.

On Thursday morning operations were resumed with the same earnestness as on Wednesday. The enemy appeared still in position, and contested every inch of our advance with the utmost determination. At 9 o'clock on that morning, however, their musketry firing was ceased, and was not again resumed. After that hour there was no further close engagements. The batteries on both sides, however, were kept in play, though a gradual diminution of the enemy's fire had observable as the day wore away, and before night it had wholly ceased. During the night heavy explosions were heard in the enemy's works, which were conjectured to be the destruction of their magazines and ammunition, which subsequently proved true. Flames were also seen issuing from the town in the latter part of the night. These indications were plain to those in the advance of our lines, and were understood to be preparations for an evacuation, but it was not even supposed by them that the work was so near its completion.

On Friday morning the battle, if such it may be called, was resumed on our part. Our batteries commenced throwing round after round of shell into the rebel intrenchments and the town, with a rapidity indicating a determination to destroy the place. Occasional volleys of musketry, too, were fired at the straw imitations of pickets, set up during the night by the enemy to deceive our army. As no response was received to any of these demonstrations, and as the supposed pickets were proven by the clearer light of day, and their undinching bravery, to be but representations, officers dashed ahead to obtain closer views and satisfy themselves of the enemy's position. Finding no resistance, they galloped carelessly on, close up to the rebel fortifications and into their works, and finally into the very town. Several little squads thus sallied out, increasing their speed as they advanced, careless of the distinction of being the first to enter. They found the place really deserted. The shells from the Federal batteries fell thick and fastest but these venturesome gentlemen but they seemed to have no fear of them.

The first party rode into the town about 7 o'clock in the morning, and then was discovered the full extent of the victory gained. Destruction, waste and desolation were visible on every hand. Huge piles of commissary stores were smouldering in the flames. The remains of buildings destroyed were conspicuous on the streets. The enemy had fled, taking care that what they could not carry away should at least not be left for the victors.

One large warehouse, filled with provisions, was all that remained undamaged of boundless stores of similar goods, sufficient to withstand a much longer siege. Sacks were torn open, barrels broken, hogsheads knocked to pieces, and their contents mixed in common piles, upon and about which huge bonfires had been lit. A score or more of buildings were already in flames, and rapidly the fire was spreading. The Baptist Church, one of the largest and finest buildings in the city, was in ruins. The platforms of the railroad station-house were on fire. The Court-house was in imminent danger. The whole town was threatened with a speedy destruction. There were but a handful of citizens left to fight the devouring element, but at this juncture our troops began to file into the town. These, as fast as they arrived, were set at work extinguishing the fire and saving property. Many, however, found time to sneak away and scour the place in search of plunder. The town was, in fact, given up to plunder, and the soldiers, who had so long and patiently manœuvred for the position, could not be expected willingly to resist the temptation to secure some valuable mementoes of the victory.

It was intuitively from the few citizens remaining, and from the straggling captives who were brought in, that the main body of the rebels had gone to Grand Junction, and that a few thousand, the last to leave, had taken the westward to Kossuth, a small town nine or ten miles southwest. The evacuation had commenced early in the week, and for several days was carried on leisurely and with good order, but at the last our forces crowded them too fast, and they were obliged to fly precipitately.

The means of transportation at their command, although known to be immense, were wholly inadequate to accommodate the grand rush of Wednesday night and Thursday, and hence could thousands of them, variously estimated at from 8,000 to 15,000, were obliged to fly on foot to Kossuth. As soon as it was ascertained what direction these had taken, Gen. HALLECK ordered large detachments of cavalry and light artillery to pursue them. The probability is they will be overhauled and forced to surrender.

The most singular circumstance connected with this evacuation was its completeness. Not only was the entire rebel army successfully withdrawn, but they carried with them every piece of ordnance they had. As yet I have to learn of a single gun that has been captured. A large quantity of ammunition was left behind, but in a damaged state. Whatever of anything they could not take away they destroyed, except the single house full of provisions. The constant whistling of locomotives, as they arrived day and night, with remarkable frequency during the week, had been noticed by our men; but so admirably did the rebels cover their real operations, that it was supposed these constantly-arriving trains were bringing in reinforcements. It is supposed that some of the enemy, perhaps a large number, went away on the Mobile and Ohio Road, early in the week, but that Col. ELLIOTT's operations in destroying the bridges on that road, mentioned in a former dispatch, closed that route against them, and resulted in a wide separation of their forces. This is corroborated by the fact that the enemy were known to have eighty-five thousand men, at the lowest estimate, in Corinth; twenty-five thousand only have gone to Grand Junction. These, with the ten or fifteen thousand who fled to Kossuth, makes but forty thousand in all. The balance are reported to have gone to Okolona, on the Mobile and Ohio Road, half way to Columbus. They are the men who went away early in the week, and division of the force argues the success of Col. ELLIOTT's expedition.

Nothing is, of course, yet known of Gen. HALLECK's plans. For the future he will be able to command, from Gen. MCCLERNAND's recent gallant exploits, a very large quantity of rolling stock, to be put immediately upon the various railroads now in his possession.

The Mobile and Ohio Road, running direct to Columbus, Ky., will greatly expedite and facilitate the transportation of supplies for him. This road will doubtless be immediately put in running order.

The whole system of railroads in the South are of the same gauge, and the stock of one road can, without trouble, be transferred to any other.

A still later dispatch to the same paper says:

Gen. HALLECK has established his headquarters in Corinth. The fire in the town has been subdued. Not over half the place was burned. On many of the deserted buildings and storehouses the facetious fugitives had placed cards, "To let; inquire of G. T. Beauregard." "This property for sale; inquire at Richmond," etc.

There has been no considerable arrest of fugitives so far as is yet publicly known. In fact, no one has yet seen any considerable number of prisoners; the highest estimate placing the total captured at five hundred. Doubtless many of those who escaped on foot will be overtaken and secured, as strong forces have been sent in pursuit.

It has been ascertained that on Thursday evening there were yet in the enemy's works between 20,000 and 30,000 men. The entire available rolling stock on the various roads controlled by the rebels was concentrated at Corinth at that time, for the final evacuation. A large number of side tracks had been laid down for the accommodation of so many cars. At sundown on Thursday there were seventeen long trains standing upon these tracks ready to move. They all left loaded to the full on that evening.

Accounts are conflicting as to the route they took. Some reports say they all went directly west toward Grand Junction, while others insist that a portion of the trains run out on the Mobile and Ohio Road, southward. If the latter should be correct, those who took that route will be yet captured, as there is no doubt of the success of Col. ELLIOTT's expedition, which effectually rendered that road impassable at or before the time the trains could reach the point to which he was sent.

Acting upon the information that some did take that road, and would therefore be stopped at a distance of forty miles, Gen. HALLECK has sent a strong force in pursuit.

Those who went by the Memphis and Charleston Railroad to Grand Junction will have clear sailing, and will probably escape. It is not presumed that they went to Grand Junction with any intention of making a stand there, but simply to expedite the movement of the trains. They can run down on the Mississippi Central Railroad from Grand Junction to Jackson, and then cut across and the Southern Mississippi Railroad to the Mobile and Ohio again, at Meridian, and join those who moved down the latter road direct at any desired point.

An impression prevails that the destination of the whole force is Richmond, Va., which they can reach by the way of Mobile.

Those who were left at Corinth on account of the insufficiency of the railroad accommodations, and who subsequently fled to Kossuth, will be captured.

To the Eighth Missouri unquestionably belongs the honor of first entering the town. As a memento of this fact, they have secured a beautiful rebel flag, bearing a life-like portrait of Jeff. DAVIS.

Gen. SHERMAN's was the first division to enter the rebel works, a distinction which was closely contested by Gen. POPE, the two divisions moving in almost simultaneously, though from opposite directions.

Criticism is not silent as against Gen. HALLECK. It it shall appear that Col. ELLIOTT was successful in cutting off their retreat directly south, and these, with the few thousand who fled afoot, are captured, it will be seen that we have gained no inconsiderable victory. Should they all escape, we yet have the position and have dispersed one of their most powerful armies. There can be no denying the fact that their retreat was a most masterly, and, so far, successful movement.

There are many subordinate officers who are crying, had Gen. POPE been in command, or had Gen. GRANT been left to manage the field operations, or had some other officers been there, there would have been no escaping. There is no disguising the fact, that from officers commanding divisions down to the rank and file of the army, there is a general burst of indignation at the Commanding General. He is denounced as incompetent to lead our army; indisposed to take advice; dictatorial and discourteous towards his subordinates, and in a thousand other things disqualified for the position of field officer. This is the first outburst of opinion. Time will doubtless modify this somewhat, and Gen. HALLECK may yet be able to show that he has not been outgeneraled.

The only announcement of the evacuation Gen. HALLECK would allow to be telegraphed to the Landing, was in these words: "The Federal flag now floats over Corinth." It is stated by persons just from there, that orders were immediately telegraphed to Pittsburgh Landing, Fort Henry, Paducah and Cairo, forbidding the transmission of any dispatches to newspapers or private individuals. If such an order was issued, it failed to reach Cairo.

The killed and wounded on our side during the two days' operations prior to the evacuation did not exceed 200 in all. The Missouri Second and Eighth suffered most. No accurate statement of losses has yet been received.

The rebels removed all their sick and wounded, and disposed of their dead, so that it is not known how heavily they suffered.

It is assumed by many who have been at Corinth that previous to their evacuation the rebels made as large a display as possible of barrels, sacks, &c., to give the impression that they had plenty of provisions, while the real fact is they were nearly destitute, and their stores rapidly diminishing. It should be borne in mind that an army of 80,000 or 100,000 men cannot subsist any great length of time on a single warehouse full of provisions.

A dispatch to the Chicago Tribune says:

"Wednesday morning a Council of War was called, in which all the Generals participated. One result reached, was the determination to make a general advance on Thursday. Another, was the conclusion to send Col. ELLIOTT, of the Second Iowa Cavalry, with eleven companies of his own command, and eight companies of the Second Michigan Cavalry, upon an expedition to the south of Corinth. His instructions were to leave the left of the Federal lines and proceed eastwardly, till near the Alabama line; thence in a southerly direction until he reached a railroad bridge on the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, where the road crosses one of the branches of the Little Tombigbee River, to burn the bridge and destroy the railroad for a mile in either direction; thence to move northward, make the circuit of the country around Corinth, and report to Gen. SHERMAN on the right. In the event that he found his progress North impeded by any considerable Confederate army, he was ordered to make the best of his way to the Mississippi River and join and cooperate with Commodore FARRAGUT's gunboat fleet. It was to cover this movement of Col. ELLIOTT that the entire line was to make a demonstration upon Corinth."

A correspondent of the Chicago Post writes:

"A temporary stand will be made on the Mobile and Ohio Road until the main body of the army can complete the fortification of Columbus. At this point they have concentrated and are still gathering all the supplies to be found in the Cotton States. It will be the last ditch. If attacked soon, they will fight until their provisions are exhausted; if not attacked, they can remain in position at most but a few weeks. In either event they will break up into guerrilla bands, and prolong the war after the manner of their more Southern neighbors, the Mexicans.

A gentleman who has just arrived here conversed with a telegraph operator who was impressed into the rebel service, and has been stationed at Corinth. He made his escape about ten days ago, and says that the day he left a message was sent to Mobile to hold that place at all hazards, as it would be the base of future operations. Large reinforcements were sent there the same day."

DEPARTMENT OF THE SHENANDOAH

Reports of the Movements of the Rebel Forces Under Jackson.

The Divisions of Smith and Longstreet Believed to be in the Valley.

MARTINSBURGH, Wednesday, June 4.

Reports here this morning are to the effect that JACKSON, with all his force, was seen on Sunday marching toward New-Market, about thirty miles south of Strasburgh. The firing heard on Monday is known to have been an attack by MYLES upon JACKSON's rear guard. It is reported on apparently reliable authority that SMITH and LONGSTREET are in the Valley with from twelve to fifteen thousand men.

FROM ANOTHER CORRESPONDENT.

MARTINSBURGH, Wednesday, June 4.

Reliable statements from Strasburgh say that JACKSON's whole force, with his train and prisoners, succeeded in passing through toward New-Market.

The firing on Monday was an attack by Gen. MYLES on JACKSON's rear guard, at Fisher's Hill, a strong strategic point, a mile and a half south of Strasburgh.

From the best information attainable, the enemy held their ground, and resumed their retreat during the night.

It is reported that JACKSON's advance guard were in New-Market on Monday night. Gens. SMITH and LONGSTREET were in the Valley, with 15,000 men, but their exact position was unknown.

FROM GEN. BANKS' ARMY.

Effects of the Retreat Throughout the Shenandoah Valley—Onward Again to Martinsburgh—Movements of Gens. Fremont and Shields.

From our own Correspondent.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE SHENANDOAH, WILLIAMSPORT, Md., Saturday, May 31, 1862.

After several vexatious delays, I have at length reached the headquarters of Gen. BANKS, Williamsport, Md.; and so far as my own feelings are concerned, and I believe the feelings of the whole of the very small force that has been left to the General, I have arrived on a day auspicious to the cause of the Union, in the pleasant Valley of the Shenandoah. With your letter of introduction in hand, I passed immediately to the exceedingly unostentatious tent of the commander, where I received every attention and facility for obtaining information that could be desired—a reception which I appreciated all the more from having met with the very "extreme of the opposite" from one of his subordinates, at another point, to whom I presented similar testimonials of the object of my mission. I am strongly tempted to give you an account of the insults to which I was subjected at Harper's Ferry—arrest and incarceration, threats to hang me, &c., volunteered, while there was not a shadow of proof against me, and while, in fact every step of the examination showed clearly that I was there for the purpose, and only for the purpose, I had named. The excuse, and perhaps it is sufficient, is that they are there surrounded by spies. But I have matters of public interest, and not personal arrogance, to write about.

I have, in so far as time has allowed, talked with officers and privates, citizens of Virginia, who have been forced to leave it again in consequence of the retreat, and citizens of Maryland who have suffered for their faith in the Union, and I have yet to find the man who has not the very highest opinion of Gen. BANKS' management; in fact, those who have suffered most have the warmest feelings in his favor. Of course, they all regret the blunder (for so it has proved) of reducing the General's force to a point which left him, had he not shown excellent generalship, at the mercy of an immensely superior rebel army. They feel that if at Washington it was believed that there was not an army in front or on either flank of the General, why was not the whole removed to a point of supposed usefulness, instead of leaving just enough to tempt the rebel army to return and destroy what remained. But they are philosophical, much more so than might be expected in men who have suffered so much. They blame no man and hope for the best. One thing, however, both citizens and soldiers do insist upon, and that is, that as the army advances again to reoccupy the lost ground, one-half of it shall not be kept guarding the property of notorious rebels, while the very rebels whose property they guard are engaged in cutting the throats and destroying the property of Union men. They feel that the more lenity is shown to the rebels the more bold and arrogant they become; that until they are made to suffer from loss of property they have deserted, to prowl about and destroy the property of others, they will continue, as they have done heretofore, to abuse the Union men among them as extensively and savagely as ever. This you may depend upon as the unanimous feeling of the friends of the National Government throughout the entire valley. And I think it deserves the attention of those who dictate to Commanding Generals all the more, from the fact that I have authority for saying that it is the openly and fervently-expressed belief of the entire army. The policy of considering rebels our brethren and treating them as such, will not do—they must be considered the children of the Government, and as they have not listened to the paternal admonition the Divine maxim, that "he who spareth the rod spoileth the child," must be applied to them. In short, the unanimous sentiment is that as we love them, and they continue in their wicked ways, they must be chastened, and that severely, too.

But as you have doubtless received many intimations of the above feeling, I will leave it without further remark, and pass to an account of

THE RETURN TO MARTINSBURGH.

Soon after noon to-day, the hearts of the town and army were gladdened by reports of the presence of FREMONT at Strasburgh, and of SHIELDS at Front Royal. It was stated, apparently upon authority, that FREMONT was engaging the enemy, with every prospect of success, and that SHIELDS had caught and beaten a considerable force, taking many prisoners and a quantity of stores. Soon afterward came the order for the Tenth Maine and the Forty-sixth Pennsylvania, with HAMPTON's Battery of four 10-pounder Parrot guns, to cross the Shenandoah and "Onward to Martinsburgh." This was considered confirmatory of the rumor, and the more so from the fact that on the previous day two regiments of cavalry had been sent forward as an advance, and only enough of them had returned to bring away ten prisoners, who were turned over to the Provost-Marshal.

The celerity and perfect order in which the troops were thrown across the Shenandoah, were admirable, and elicited the highest praise. First came the brave and sturdy Tenth of Maine, and although the rain was falling in torrents, every eye was full of fire, and the only words I heard along the line were, "Now, boys, we'll have our revenge on those villains who raised the black flag." They passed over, two companies at a time, in a large flat boat, and soon as each load was deposited, off it went up the road at the double quick, and took shelter from the storm in a large barn near by, until all were over. They then commenced their march for Martinsburgh. HAMPTON's Battery followed, the horses fording the river, while the guns were taken over in the boat. Next followed the Forty-sixth Pennsylvania, and long before dark, all were on their way to Martinsburgh, cheering and singing as they marched—many of them singing "John Brown's body" while "marching along" over the "sacred soil," without fear of the chivalric sons of that deluded State.

Although the above-named force has already left Williamsport, and it is expected that more will leave to-morrow, it is not supposed probable that the General's headquarters will be removed at present. The joy of the citizens here, and yet those who are here who were obliged to flee from Winchester when the retreat commenced, may be estimated partially when I say that there were a large number of men and many women who stood without shelter during the whole of the storm, to watch the passage of the troops, and cheer them on. Every now and then you could hear a voice from the roadside crying, "Truth of Maine, don't forget the black flag." To-night the town is perfectly quiet, and the Virginians here are hopeful of being able to return home in safety at an early day.

There are but few sick or wounded soldiers here. Those who are here, however, are well cared for, not only by their officers, but by the lady residents of this town. I hear of one widow lady, Mrs. ARMSTRONG, of the Globe Hotel, who has been untiring in her attentions, not only now, but while the troops were here before the first advance on Martinsburgh. Several regiments, being hurried away, were obliged to leave some of their number, who were too ill to proceed, but not so seriously sick as to require medical attendance. Many such, I am informed, she took into her house and nursed until they were able to join their companies. Other ladies, not having room for sick or wounded in their houses, have taken care that all such who come within their knowledge, have been provided with such comforts and delicacies as were best suited to each particular case.

The return of the army to Williamsport has been, in an immediate business point of view, of considerable advantage. As you have already been informed, a large number of privates and many of the officers lost all they had in the way of change of clothing and the general make up of a soldier's kit. There has, therefore, been a great demand for water-proofs, boots, shoes and a variety of articles, nearly all of which have been purchased from the merchants in town.

While walking down to the river to-day, in company with Mr. JESSE W. HEESOM, of Martinsburgh, who has been a Union man "from the start," and who has been made to suffer for it, for the purpose of examining the works for the protection of our troops, should it become necessary for them to recross the river, we passed the shop of a colored barber who was known to Mr. HEESOM. The latter said to the barber, "Well, Jesse, your business is all going away again," referring to the departure of the troops.

Our colored brother replied: "Well, sir, I'm tired; and if I wasn't, I would be glad of it, if they'll only make the rebels skedaddle, and run as fast as the rebels made them skedaddle, and run again, because Gen. BANKS hadn't no force enough to lick them—and that's the opinion of all us colored folks; we don't care what comes only lick the rebels."

Of the batteries on the Maryland side of the Shenandoah, I would like to give you some account of their position and strength, but I am told, it would not be prudent at present. However, it may be said that their position is so prominent, and they can be seen so easily from the Virginia side, that I don't think they will be brought into service for some time.

SUNDAY, June 1—5 P. M.

The mail closes soon, and I must hasten to send what little I have learned to-day. There has been nothing additional in relation to the movements of Gens. FREMONT or SHIELDS, which I am at liberty to publish. But, nevertheless, there is no occasion for harboring either doubts or fears of speedy success.

Two companies of cavalry returned from the Virginia side to-day, and consequently a rumor gained credence immediately that the advance cavalry had been driven out of Martinsburgh. On inquiry, I learned that the returned companies did not form any portion of the advance. They had been on picket service, and returned simply for rest and refreshment. So far as is known here, matters remain very much as they were yesterday. I start for Martinsburgh to-morrow, and expect to return next day with an account of the state of affairs there.
